Master of mime now
rests in eternal silence

PARIS—MARCEL MARCEAU, THE MASTER of mime who transformed silence into poetry with artful gestures that spoke to young and old around the world, has died after 80 years on the stage. He was 84.

Marceau, who breathed new life into an art that dates to ancient Greece, died Saturday in Paris, his former assistant said.

SC to look into P10-M 'bribe'

Justice Santiago denies having received money in gift box

By Leila B. Salaverria

THE SUPREME COURT WILL HOLD A SPECIAL session today to tackle media reports implicating one of its own magistrates in a P10-million payoff scandal.

Jose Midas Marquez, spokesperson for the high court, said yesterday the justices will decide whether or not to investigate "disturbing" allegations that came out in the national broadsheet Malaya and Newsbreak magazine.

The justice named in the alleged bribery incident, Justice Consuelo Ynares-Santiago, denied the accusation and asked for an immediate investigation. She will not attend the special session.

In its report last week, Newsbreak said Santiago fired her former judicial staff officer, Daisy Cecilia Delis, after the latter opened a gift-wrapped box delivered to her office and found wads of peso bills, estimated at P10 million inside. It also said the payoff might have been intended to influence decisions in two cases. One involving an official of Philippine International Air Terminals Co. Inc. (Piatco), and the other a land case.

Malaya reported of the same incident but stopped short of naming Santiago.

"It's really disturbing because it attacks the high court, the integrity of the justices themselves, considering that the Chief Justice has been very relentless in his efforts to cleanse the judiciary," Marquez said.

In a statement issued yesterday, Santiago denounced the allegations against her as "malicious and unfounded" and said she suspected they were intended to influence the Court's decision in a Quezon City land dispute.

"At the outset, let me underscore that these are blatant lies clearly aimed at smearing and maligning my character and person, and the integrity of the judiciary, which I have been faithfully serving for 34 years now," Santiago said.

"I highly suspect that these are parts of concerted attempts to influence the high court in deciding a big land dispute in Quezon City now pending before the Supreme Court. Nevertheless, I leave the determination of these to the investigation I have requested," she said.

She also said she was reserving the right to file appropriate criminal cases against those who made the accusations.

She thanked Puno for including the issue in the en banc session today.

According to Marquez, the tribunal will include in its deliberations an affidavit executed by Delis denying she was aware of any bribery attempt involving her erstwhile boss.

Although Malaya did not name Delis, the former secretary of the woman justice was described as a certain "Cecilia" who was named after her aunt, the late Supreme Court Justice Cecilia Muñoz-Palma.

Delis, in her affidavit, said she felt alluded to.

Marquez said there were no hard and fast rules in the Supreme Court on how to handle such allegations.

"There's no SOP really because cases like this aren't really very common," Marquez said.

By Kristine L. Alave and Michael Lim Ubac

THE ONGOING INVESTIGATION of the administration's loan deals with the Chinese government and the "indefinite suspension" of the Cyber Education project has not discouraged the Department of Education from pursuing the high-tech initiative.

Education Secretary Jesli Lapus yesterday slammed lawmakers for "muddling" the P26-billion CyberEd project and the $329-million National Broadband Network (NBN) deal with Chinese telecommunication firm ZTE Corp.

Although "disheartened" by President Macapagal-Arroyo's decision to suspend the two projects, Lapus said the DepEd would continue to train teachers and education supervisors to create and deliver content via cyberspace and would use IT to reach out to students in the remotest areas.

He said the country would eventually embrace CyberEd, as "we live in a world where information reigns. Everybody is going there. We should have done this a long time ago. We just have to wait out this negative environment."

The DepEd has scheduled a demonstration of the CyberEd program in three schools in November, in anticipation of the first part of its roll-out in January 2008. But with the suspension of the initiative, Lapus said he expected the project to be delayed by at least six months.

The education chief said lawmakers got it wrong when they lumped CyberEd and the broadband contract together. He added that the two projects would use different technologies and would have different clients.

Lapus stressed that the National Economic and Development Authority (NEDA), which evaluates government contracts, had approved the CyberEd project because it would be beneficial to teachers and students.

High court takes up writ favoring victims

By Leila B. Salaverria

FAMILIES AND RELATIVES OF VICTIMS OF extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances are now a step closer to making the authorities exert more effort and be more accountable for the fate of their loved ones after a Supreme Court subcommittee finished drafting the rules on the issuance of a writ of amparo.

The Supreme Court en banc will discuss the draft rules for the writ of amparo (protection in Spanish) today and expects to promulgate these before the 62nd anniversary of the United Nations on Oct. 24, the tribunal said in a statement.

The high court's Committee on the Revision of the Rules of the Court drafted the rules for the writ, which was one of the remedies put forth during the Supreme Court-led multisectoral summit on extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances held in July.

Chief Justice Reynato Puno earlier said the writ of amparo would stop law enforcers from resorting to the simple defense of denial when cases are brought against them to produce a person who has gone missing. The writ can be used to compel state agents to look for the person.

The writ, which is expected to be made retroactive, "will hold public authorities to a high standard of official conduct, failing which they would be held accountable to our people," Puno said.

He had also said that he would harness the Supreme Court's power under the Constitution to promulgate rules that would ensure that constitutional rights are protected, noting that the killings and disappearances had given the country a "black eye."

Aside from the writ of amparo, the high court is also eyeing another measure, the writ of habeas data, to allow families of victims of enforced disappearances to invoke the right to truth and compel the military and other authorities to give them access to official documents.

The writ of habeas data, currently available in Latin American countries, would also require government agents to correct or destroy erroneous data gathered and stored against the disappeared.

Puno had described it as "a remedy to protect the image, privacy and honor of an individual and to enforce the freedom of information of a person."

The high court is also reviewing the guidelines for the writ of habeas corpus, which is so far the only remedy that families of the disappeared can resort to.

Get ready for colder, wetter times – Pagasa

By TJ Burgonio

WEATHER FORECASTERS ARE ADVISING the public to brace for wetter and colder weather in the next three months when La Niña converges with the northeast monsoon.

Residents living in the country's eastern coast off the Pacific Ocean will take the brunt of the above-normal rainfall to be induced by La Niña from October to December, forecasters said yesterday.

A weak La Niña has developed from the cooling of the sea surface temperature in the eastern equatorial Pacific Ocean and is expected to bring more rains to the country in the last quarter.

La Niña is associated with increased rainfall. When it hit the country from December 2005 to March 2006, it induced heavy rains and triggered floods, landslides and mudslides as occurred in Guinsaugon, Southern Leyte, where over 1,000 residents died.

"People should take this seriously, and not lightly. They should take precautionary steps to mitigate the adverse impact of this weather condition," said senior weather specialist Anthony Lucero in an interview.

For starters, the public should drain canals and unclog waterways, identify flood-safe areas, set up an alert system against floods, and organize a team in their barangays to carry out this procedure, he said.

The regions facing the Pacific Ocean—Bicol, Eastern Visayas, Eastern Mindanao, Caraga—and parts of Isabela in Northern Luzon would be directly hit by the above-normal rainfall, said Lucero at the Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) office in Quezon City.

"Metro Manila, which lies on the western section of the country, will also likely experience above-normal rainfall, but not in the same degree as the eastern seaboard," he said.

During La Niña, the sea surface temperature becomes cooler than normal, a condition that prompts the easterly winds over the Pacific Ocean to produce more moisture in the air that eventually forms rain-inducing clouds, Lucero said.

If a typhoon swirls into the country, this would further enhance the easterly winds and trigger stronger storm surges, he said.

Cold weather would follow once the northeast monsoon (or Amihan) sweeps into the country from the plateaus of Asia and the Himalayas, bringing rain and cooler weather beginning November, the weather specialist said.

"The two (La Niña and Amihan) will merge. The northeast monsoon will add to the intensity of the strong easterly winds or 'trade winds,'" he said.

Making Fun Memories with Fabfoto

Fabfoto's office on Tomas Morato is a simple, cozy nook, with deep couches and dim lighting that immediately puts visitors at ease. Photographer Nelwin Uy, the proprietor of the establishment candidly shares that his booming photo business would not have been possible without the SELPHY CP730, one of the models in Canon's line of portable printers designed for personal and business use.

Basically, Fabfoto offers a photo booth which clients rent during events. Guests step into the booth and operate the machine themselves. They can pose and ham it up by using some props like wigs or headbands that the booth provides. Of course, with the SELPHY CP730, guests can have their photos ready right there at the event. Aside from the bestselling photo "postcard" products from the booth, they also offer souvenir items that feature photos printed on the SELPHY CP730 like tumblers and cellphone holders.

When it comes to quality, Nelwin is impressed with what the SELPHY CP730 offers. "The printer gives you this glossy, smooth look on the prints—the quality you associate with photo labs. Plus, the printouts are coated in the printing process so they don't get damaged or torn easily," he shares. He also believes that for a machine this good, maintenance is not a problem. "You just simply change the cartridge that has both the ink and paper. The most you have to do is to occasionally check the filters to make sure they're clean. Otherwise, it will churn out pictures with minimum fuss."

Mercury is RISING

I rise on an issue that envelopes the earth, an issue that occupied the attention of generations of scientists but is just now arising in public consciousness.

In the last 30 years, world's average temperature has risen dramatically. Mercury is rising and Mother Earth is feverish. The number one culprit is greenhouse gas emissions from the burning of fossil fuels to feed our industries and run our motor vehicles.

This rise in world's temperature is causing dramatic climate change. The rise in the world's sea level, abnormal weather patterns, strong typhoons, tornadoes, el nino and la nina phenomena, heavy rains which cause flooding in many parts of the world, and loss of biodiversity are just some of the effects of climate change.

Rapid global warming and climate change are issues that affect our country being an archipelago in the biggest ocean of our earth – an ocean considered as the main driver of the world's climate systems.

The early warning signs are: heat waves and period of unusually warm weather; ocean warming, sea-level rise and coastal flooding; glaciers melting; and Arctic and Antarctic warming. The harbingers are: spreading disease; early spring arrival; plant and animal range shifts and population changes; coral reef bleaching; intense downpours, heavy snowfalls and heavy flooding; droughts and fires.

Early warning signs are measurable events but are not so easily perceived as signs while harbingers manifest the chain of events over time and say definitively that what is being warned has come about.

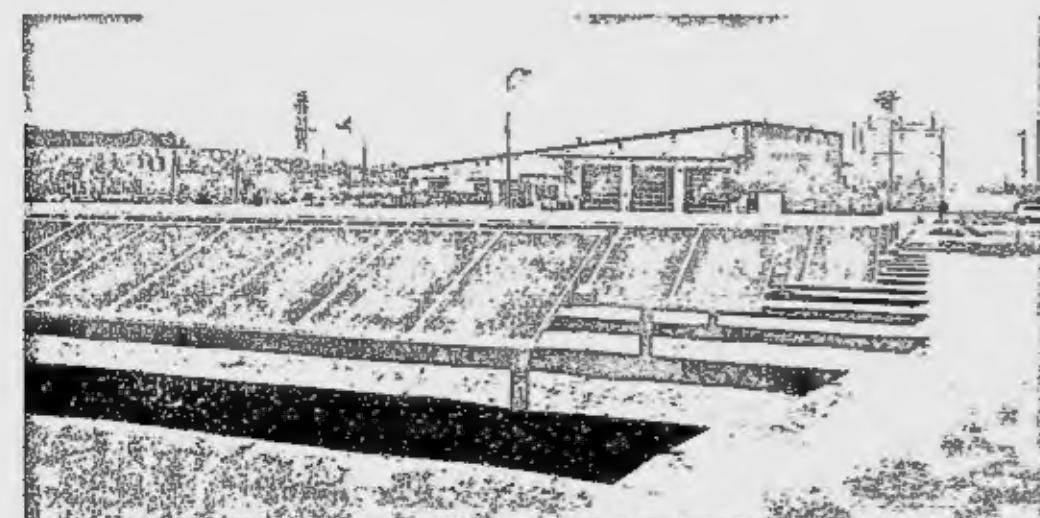

They are vital signs and symptoms – of a

Sen. Juan Miguel 'Migz' Zubiri

We must think global
...but act local.

very sick earth - that scientists record and for which governments spend billions of dollars to diagnose, and of late, to heal. Let me repeat, Mother Earth is sick.

Long ago, anyone of us could have said "what of an ice cap melting that's so far away". Besides, the earth underwent cataclysmic climatic changes and it has bounced back and managed to host new species. When drastic climate change wiped out the dinosaurs, mammals and man flourished.

The debate rages on. One camp says global warming fits a normal pattern of the earth's climate since it was born and that we are merely in one of those cycles of climatic changes. The other camp says the warming is coming in convulsions and man holds most of the blame, especially since the Industrial Revolution.

What is it really? Climate change "refers to the variation in the earth's global climate or in regional climates over time. It describes changes in the variability or average state of the atmosphere over time scales ranging from decades to millions of years. These changes can be caused by processes internal to the Earth, external forces such as, variations in sunlight intensity or, more recently, human activities."

Climate scientists at Goddard Institute for Space Studies also corrected previously accepted conclusions that most global warming occurred before 1940. It said: "Global warming is now 0.6°C in the past three decades and 0.8°C in the past century. It is no longer correct to say that 'most global warming occurred before 1940'. More specifically, there was slow global warming, with large fluctuations, over the century up to 1975 and subsequent rapid warming of almost 0.2°C per decade."

It is ordinarily believed that melted ice will cool ocean water and just raise sea levels. It would. But a further life-threatening result of melting polar ice caps is that the extremely cold water sinks and pushes warmer air on the sea surface upwards. This in combination with altered ocean currents greatly produce extreme weather situations like stronger cyclones and heavy precipitation in altered patterns of type, frequency, density and coverage.

Tornadoes that hit Nueva Ecija, Pampanga, Bulacan and the haze in Baguio are among them. The devastation of supertyphoons that hit Bicol hard demolished houses, destroyed crops and infrastructure, are similarly effects of global warming. The excessive downpour which produced landslides in Leyte and buried people and properties is another.

Heavy and persistent rainfall caused similar landslides in Compostela Valley and Bukidnon while on mainland Luzon, Albay cries out for water. Global warming causes a redistribution of rainfall: lots of it in one area and lacking in another.

How we produce and use power, farm, manufacture goods, consume our goods and consume wastefully - had caused the thickening of the layer of Green House Gases (GHG) in the atmosphere, of which carbon dioxide is the most prevalent.

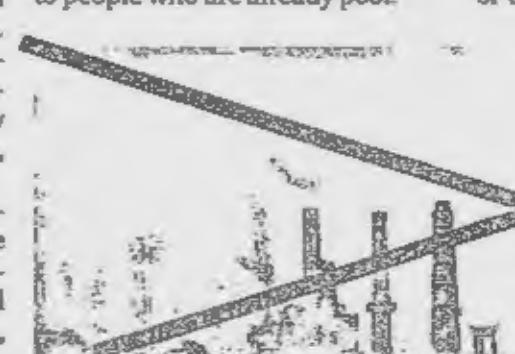

Our country's GHG emissions come from activities associated with energy - accounting for almost 50 per cent of our GHG emissions, for power and fuel; agriculture at 33 %, industry at 11 % and waste at 7 %.

The Green House Gases Hydrofluorocarbons, perfluorocarbons, sulphur hexafluoride, carbon dioxide, methane, and nitrous oxide trap infrared waves that should have been radiated back into space. The GHG reabsorb these infrared waves, then re-emit these downward thereby causing lower temperatures to warm.

We have not been good stewards, thus our sufferings. More than that, at greater risk are those who work the soil like farmers in the vegetable bowl in the Cordilleras to the farmers in rice bowl of central Luzon. Those who harvest resources from lakes, rivers and seas. Those who eke out a living as marginal fishers from the coastal areas, or even operators of the most luxurious beach resorts. Livestock growers in the piggeries lately struck by cholera.

It is ironic that we, who control the resources to combat global warming are one of the last to know. More ironic, is that global warming impacts most negatively to people who are already poor.

Farmers in La Union, Ilocos Norte, Ilocos Sur, Abra, Nueva Vizcaya, Quirino, Isabela, Apayao, Benguet, Mt. Province and Kalinga have experienced decreasing rice, corn and vegetable harvests and inability to plant new crops. In May, the dry spell affected the livelihood of about 30 percent of the Cebu City's mountain residents and damaged agricultural crops.

Fishponds in Isabela "dried up." At risk too were aquaculture in Bulacan, Cavite, Pangasinan, Iloilo, Negros, Bohol, Cebu, Zamboanga, Surigao, South Cotabato, Davao and Sulu.

Another effect of climate change is increase in the ranges of disease vectors.

Doctors undertook a study that concentrated on seven landfall tropical cyclones and the relation to hospital admission of eight diseases (gastroenteritis, dengue fever, hepatitis, influenza, measles, typhoid fever, bronchopneumonia, and tetanus) for the period 1984 to 1988. They found that admissions on mosquito-borne diseases and water-borne diseases had increased due to global warming.

As a result of the lack of rainfall during the second quarter "the energy sector has increased the use of coal and oil to compensate for the limited load from hydroelectric plants. National Power Corp. said that 18.95 percent on the average of the generation mix from 2001 to 2006 came from the hydro plants, peaking last year at 23 percent. The generation mix is derived from coal, geothermal, hydro, natural gas and oil-based plants. With the decrease in the capacity of hydroelectric plants to produce power, the slack is now being taken up by coal, oil, natural gas and geothermal energy-fed power plants."

Hydroelectric plants of San Roque, Binga and Magat in Northern Luzon and Angat and Pantabangan in Central Luzon had low water levels."

Because our alternative energy resources are not yet fully tapped, this development in the energy sector alone could set us back with so many tons of carbon dioxide emissions, one of the largest greenhouse gases and have done part of our share. We have passed RA 9367 or the Biofuels law last year. And, I would like to thank Sen. Miriam Defensor-Santiago, as my counterpart in the Senate, when we championed the law in the 13th Congress.

With that law, instead of importing our oil, we can now plant 'oil' in our soil. Thus, saving the country of dollar reserves from importing fuel oils while providing our farmers alternative crops to plant and increase agricultural productivity. The use of biofuels will also reduce CO2 emissions and increase efficiency of our motor vehicles. However, that is not enough.

We are renewing our call, sounding off the alarm and raising the ante, that the Senate act fast in passing the Renewable Energy Bill which several of our colleagues have filed, as well as this representation.

This bill will ignite the development and utilization of renewable energy in the country. This will redound to a net-benefit of as much as $1.2 billion through the development of about 2,500 MW of renewable energy-based on on-grid power projects. The country will also substantially reduce its dependence and avoid high import costs of crude oil or fuels typically used by conventional power plants. But more important than the economic benefits of using renewable energy are the benefits to the environment. The country will avoid the harmful effects of GHG emissions from conventional power plants. We may even be able to sell carbon emissions credits through trading mechanisms set-up under the Kyoto Protocol.

Mr. President, distinguished colleagues, all the effects of passing this bill point to positive direction. Let us become visionary leaders, let us muster the political will and courage and have the sense of urgency in passing legislation for renewable energy.

In 2003, this Senate had demonstrated its political will and vision for our future when it ratified the Kyoto Protocol and passed the Biofuels law.

Mother Earth is seriously ill and needs intensive care. We must do our share to stop the world from hemorrhaging. It is now our time to rise again and secure our future, our children's future and the future of the generations to come.

GMA flip-flops on Neri

secretary Eduardo Ermita said he had advised Neri of the President's instructions for him to stay behind and attend the Senate hearing.

Later, Neri told ABS-CBN News that his trip to the UN headquarters in New York with Ms Arroyo had been canceled.

The announcement by Neri came as several pro-Estrada supporters gathered in front of his home in Sta. Mesa Heights in Quezon City to support him in his testimony at the Senate.

Allegations that the NBN contract was overpriced to facilitate kickbacks to senior government officials and that the President's husband and Commission on Elections Chair Benjamin Abalos Sr. were involved were aired in a Senate inquiry last week.

Neri earlier said he remained ready to testify in the Senate probe in which he is expected to confirm or deny under oath the alleged P200-million bribe offer made to him by Abalos.

President's husband a no-show

Jose Miguel Arroyo, the President's husband, has formally declined to appear before the Senate inquiry. Abalos said he would attend the hearing. He has denied brokering the deal and offering bribes.

Ms Arroyo suspended the deal over the weekend but the Supreme Court earlier stopped its implementation after it received two separate petitions to scrap the project, which is intended to create a broadband network that would link all government agencies.

Neri did not attend the Senate hearing on Thursday, citing intestinal flu as an excuse.

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye yesterday told reporters that Neri was not part of the President's delegation to the UN General Assembly.

Three hours later, in a text message at about 5 p.m., Bunye said Neri was part of the delegation.

"His attendance was requested by [Foreign] Secretary (Alberto) Romulo per letter dated Friday," Bunye said.

At the hearing in the House of Representatives on the CHED budget, Neri said: "I will come back in time, your honors, as I promised to answer all the questions."

Follow legal order

Neri said he had been told by the Department of Foreign Affairs that he might be needed on the President's trip to New York.

Asked by Cagayan de Oro Rep. Rufus Rodriguez whether he would skip the Senate hearing, Neri said: "The President is my superior ... and I don't want to violate any law."

"I guess if instructed to go and it is a legal order, I may have to follow," Neri said.

He said he was summoned to join the President as the former Neda director general for his expertise on the Millennium Development Challenge Account.

Disappointed

Neri's announcement in the House that he would forego his testimony at the Senate inquiry disappointed senators.

Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano, chair of the blue ribbon committee, one of the three panels jointly investigating the NBN deal, said he would issue a subpoena to compel Neri to appear at the hearing next week.

Sen. Mar Roxas II expressed alarm over reports that both Neri and Finance CHED CHAIR Romulo Neri is in a pensive mood during Monday's budget hearing at the House of Representatives.

EDWIN BACAGNAS

Secretary Margarito Teves would be absent from tomorrow's hearing.

Roxas said he received a phone call from Teves that he would not be present [tomorrow] because he was leaving with the President for New York.

"I call on the President to allow Secretary Neri to perform his paramount duty of testifying before the Senate and reveal the truth behind the ZTE broadband fiasco," he said.

Get to bottom

"We want to get to the bottom of this. Aside from the obvious anomalies as presented so far, we need to know how not to get into a mess such as this one again," Roxas said.

Sen. Pia S. Cayetano warned that Neri's nonappearance would only "stoke" more controversy in the anomalous deal.

She said Neri could shed light on whether he approved the ZTE contract or just the NBN concept and why it was converted from a build-operate-transfer deal to an outright concession loan.

"Secretary Neri holds key information which makes him perhaps the most important witness in the ongoing Senate investigation," said Pia Cayetano.

She suggested that the Senate offer Neri bodyguards to ensure his safety.

Sen. Francis Escudero said Neri was needed at the hearing, not in the United States. "What will he do there? He is needed here and not there. The President should serve the interest of the Filipinos not New Yorkers," he said.

Prepared to tell all

House Minority Leader Ronaldo Zamora said he had information that Neri was prepared to tell the senators all he knew.

"Romy will talk. Just don't expect him to volunteer information," Zamora told reporters.

"He wants to be asked questions and he wants to be under oath.... He will not lie," the minority leader said.

A congressman told the INQUIRER that Neri had already told a number of people about his conversation with Ms Arroyo after Abalos allegedly offered him P200 million in exchange for Neda approval of the ZTE deal.

"The President supposedly told him, 'Then don't accept.' Then she supposedly said 'Just approve the contract,'" the congressman said.

"(Neri) was surprised by [her] reaction. There was no hint of the President wanting to go after Abalos. (Instead) the President told him to approve [it]," he said.

Former Socioeconomic Planning Secretary Felipe Medalla yesterday advised his former colleague, Neri, to show up at tomorrow's Senate inquiry and "tell the truth."

"To me, failure to appear in the Senate conveys a lot of information. If he has nothing to hide, he should show up," said Medalla, a former Neda director general.

Medalla, who left the Cabinet in 2001 and now teaches at the UP School of Economics, said snubbing the inquiry would send a very wrong message to the public.

"I'd say that a failure to show in the Senate could mean he's been pressured not to appear," he said.

Cancel deal

Senators are pushing for the cancellation of the ZTE deal.

Sen. Loren Legarda said that the Philippines and China should "jointly abrogate" the ZTE-NBN deal because "it has become too tainted, too quarrelsome, and untenable."

ZTE, China's second-largest telecoms equipment maker, has said it was "utterly disappointed" with the decision to suspend the contract.

Ms Arroyo yesterday said she had asked the Department of Transportation and Communications to seek help from the country's three major telephone companies for an alternative to the suspended project. With reports from Juliet Labog-Javellana and Dona Z. Pazzibugan hearing yesterday that he had recommended the suspension of the memorandum of agreement with Jilin Fu Hua Agricultural Science and Technology Development Co. and the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region Government.

Jilin Fu Hua is expected to invest $3.8 billion in the next five to seven years in the development of one-million hectares of Philippine agricultural land for hybrid corn, rice and sorghum. This year, it has committed to complete the cultivation of 50,000 hectares of land for hybrid corn and sweet sorghum in several provinces in Cagayan Valley, Isabela, Nueva Ecija and Pangasinan.

The memorandum of agreement with the agricultural department of Guangxi Zhuang covers the development of an initial 40,000 hectares of land for cassava and sugar for ethanol production.

A third agreement with Beidahuang Seed Co. was cited in Yap's letter to Agrarian Reform Secretary Nasser Pangandaman and Environment Secretary Lito Atienza on Sept. 21. Yap chairs the convergence initiative among the three departments.

Deeper consultation

Beidahuang projects involve the development of 200,000 hectares of land in the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle and the identification of potential sites for agri-tourism and organic food growing.

The memorandum of understanding (MOU) with the Chinese consortium, signed in Clark on April 4, entailed the undertaking of a feasibility study at no cost to the Philippine government or the state-owned Clark International Airport Corp. (CIAC), which oversees the redevelopment of the Diosdado Macapagal International Airport as the country's leading international gateway for passengers and cargo.

Nestor Mangio and Victor Jose Luciano, chair and president of CIAC, said everything about the "exploratory talk" with the CDB had been transparent.

Luciano said the Sept. 14 mission in Beijing, which he, Mangio and Bases Conversion Development Authority Chair Aloysius Santos led, took along some members of the Philippine press.

"There is no deal to speak of. The Chinese consortium will still submit a feasibility study and we will have to evaluate it," Luciano told the INQUIRER.

and Commerce Minister Bo Xilai had assured each other that economic cooperation through investment and trade would not suffer a setback.

"We agreed that we, as trade ministers, would continue to work toward the further strengthening of bilateral relations despite all these developments," Favila said.

"Minister Bo and I are of the same mind that nothing should strain or get in the way of our countries' relations," he said.

In a statement, Education Secretary Jesli Lapus expressed fears that the Chinese government may eventually scrap all the deals with the Arroyo administration in light of the bad press from the NBN contract.

He said China was extending aid as a gesture of goodwill to improve its image. "Now, if Chinese aid is demonized, they might just cancel their assistance," Lapus said.

Makati Business Club (MBC) executive director Alberto A. Lim said that the suspension of the contract should not affect Philippine relations with China, saying it was not a good deal anyway.

"The NBN project is not necessarily a positive development because it is directed toward what China wants," he told the INQUIRER.

Donor-driven project

Lim described the NBN project as a donor- or lender-driven project, in which the lender has the say on what technology and which entities would be involved.

The NBN project involves the setting up of a state-of-the-art communications system to interconnect all government agencies, down to the poorest municipalities.

Favila himself witnessed the signing of an agreement for an additional $400 million in credit facility from the China Export-Import Bank, held at the Makati Shangri-La Hotel during Bo's visit last month.

Back then, Favila had explained that the additional amount in preferential buyer's credit was part of previous assurances that the Chinese government had extended to President Macapagal-Arroyo.

He said the government had previously secured $1.4 billion through this credit line from the China Eximbank, bringing the total to $1.8 billion.

Cancelation of deal

Favila said that while the additional fund was meant for the government's priority project, it was particularly for the NBN project.

Sen. Mar Roxas said in a statement that he had recommended canceling the deal altogether.

"It's not transparent, thus possibly overpriced, overdesigned," he said, adding he felt Manila's ties with China were strong enough to withstand the controversy.

The MBC, along with the Management Association of the Philippines, Financial Executives Institute of the Philippines, Foundation for Economic Freedom Inc. and Action for Economic Reforms, called for the scrapping of the deal in a statement issued Sept. 6.

The five groups said they were "appalled that the culture of impunity among government officials appears to have spread to an extent exceeding that of all past administrations."

Favila said the government did not go far enough by suspending the contract, which was "just like throwing cold water on a crackling fire which is the Senate investigation."

"This move is meant to stop the probe which the public had avidly followed," Lim said. "Why do that? Can (the contract) not stand the scrutiny of the Senate?"

Further, Lim said the suspension of the contract did not diminish business confidence in the Philippines.

"On the contrary, (the NBN issue) should improve business confidence if any wrongdoings are sorted out and those responsible are punished," Lim added.

Investor confidence

Some analysts pointed out that the Philippine move could sour investor confidence in the country.

"It seems like there is a big crack in the wall between Chinese and Philippine relations due to the ZTE deal," said Astro del Castillo, a director of the Association of Securities Analysts of the Philippines.

"Our relations will somehow be affected considering this is supposedly a major and serious contract," he said.

Economist Bing Icamina from AYC Consultants said confidence might be affected, although he argued China still had surplus cash to invest.

"The concern now is dealing with the government on a contract basis, given this experience," he said. "Essentially, you have to be careful when dealing with government agencies."

Castillo said the government should punish those found guilty of corruption over the deal, adding "good governance and transparency" were essential to attracting foreign investment.

"If there is no level playing field, you will see an immediate loss of confidence," he said. "With reports from Kristine L. Alave, AFP

Stop recruiting tribal folk, bishops tell gov't, NPA

By Beverly T. Natividad

THE CATHOLIC BISHOPS' CONFERENCE of the Philippines (CBCP) has appealed to both the government and the communist New People's Army (NPA) to stop the recruitment of indigenous peoples into their respective armed units and to declare tribal lands as zones of peace.

Laoag Bishop Sergio L. Utleg, chair of the Episcopal Commission on Indigenous Peoples (ECIP), said in a statement that they were alarmed over the "systemic recruitment" of indigenous peoples into the Citizens Armed Forces Geographical Unit (Cafgu), Civilian Volunteers Organization (CVO), the NPA and other paramilitary groups.

"Let us not add more to their suffering by making their communities permanent battle-fields. Let their communities become zones of peace—free from armed men," said Utleg.

"We call on the government and the NPA to respect the dignity of the indigenous people, who are sons and daughters of God, by stopping their widespread recruitment," said the CBCP in a statement.

Utleg said that over the past months they had been receiving reports of rampant recruitment in tribal communities in the Sierra Madre Mountains and in the provinces of Bulacan, Quezon, Aurora, Nueva Ecija, Zambales, Agusan, Bukidnon, the Zamboanga peninsula, North Cotabato, Sultan Kudarat and Davao City.

Accordingly, he said, indigenous recruits were being given sacks of rice and mobile phones to act either as informants for the military or the NPA. Due to the active recruitment, he said, many upland youngsters are now suspected of being either NPA sympathizers or military assets.

"To involve them in military or NPA activities is to make their communities potential permanent battlegrounds," said Utleg.

Utleg reminded both sides that the indigenous peoples were supposed to be accorded special protection under existing laws. The Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law between the government and the NPA prohibits the participation of civilians in military operations.

Prelate rues more 'broken homes'

By Lelia B. Salaverria

BROKEN FAMILIES HAVE BECOME a "common occurrence" in the Philippines and are no longer limited to high-profile people or those in show business, a prominent Catholic bishop has lamented.

Lingayen-Dagupan Archbishop Oscar Cruz, in a statement posted on his website over the weekend, said children were usually the victims of the failed unions, which he attributed to distorted values and a downgraded view of marriage in this predominantly Catholic country.

It is unfortunate, he said, that even marriages of people with strong Filipino family traditions and culture do not last, and unions celebrated with much fanfare often end up in civil annulments.

"Both perception and reports have it that marriages in the country are becoming less and less stable, and more and more prone to failure," wrote Cruz. This, he said, did not refer only to the marriages of people in the entertainment industry, but of ordinary Filipinos.

According to Cruz, the "serious distortion of ethical principles and moral values" was the culprit.

"A good number of men and women get married for the wrong reasons, for worldly motives and with unrealistic expectations. There is practically nothing sacred about human sexuality. Nor is marriage sincerely considered a lifelong covenant," he said.

This watered-down view of the marital vow and the lack of faith among couples weaken their marriage, he said.

Prayer, according to Cruz, is often viewed as a sign of weakness and something people only resort to in times of trouble; religious rituals are deemed old-fashioned.

"Going to Church is looked upon as a practice observed simply by old women and little children, the poor and the sick," he said.

10,000th Botika ng Barangay opens in QC

THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH HAS opened its 385th Botika ng Barangay in Metro Manila, bringing the number of its low-priced pharmacies to 10,000 nationwide.

The 10,000th BnB was launched in Barangay Pinakaisahan in Cubao, Quezon City, yesterday in line with the commemoration of the 29th year of the Generics Law.

This would give more indigent Filipinos increased access to "low-priced yet effective medicine," said Health Secretary Francisco Duque III in a statement.

The DOH is set to open similar pharmacies in Metro Manila soon, he added.

The BnB project was launched in 2003 "to ensure accessibility to low-priced generic over-the-counter drugs and eight prescription drugs."

The project, according to Duque, is part of the DOH's "Half-Priced Medicines Program" which aims to bring down the cost of medicine to half their 2001 prices. The BnB serves as the distribution network of the DOH in coordination with the Philippine International Trading Corporation (PITC).

In putting up these pharmacies, the DOH provides local governments with seed capital of P25,000 worth of drugs and medicines through the PITC. The medicines for the BnB project are mostly imported from India and Pakistan but it also carries local branded generic drugs.

The DOH trains operators of the BnB. The DOH also submits the imported drugs for quality assurance tests to the Bureau of Food and Drugs.

Medicines commonly sold in a BnB include amoxicillin, cotrimoxazole, paracetamol and multivitamins for children.

Amoxicillin, for example, is sold at P2.02 per capsule in BnBs compared to P5.10 in other drugstores. Paracetamol, on the other hand, is sold at P0.46 per tablet compared to P1.15 in other drugstores.

The PITC earlier said it was eyeing 11,000 BnBs by 2007. Beverly T. Natividad

25th Week in Ordinary Time

1st Reading: Ezra 6:7-8, 12-14; 20-21

Then his mother and his relatives came to him, but they could not get to him because of the crowd. Someone told him, "Your mother and your brothers are standing outside and wish to meet you." Then Jesus answered, "My mother and my brothers are those who hear the word of God and do it."

Commentary
King Darius lets the people work on the temple and be repaid from the royal revenue! The people work, encouraged by the Word of God through the prophets with them: Haggai and Zechariah. They finish a portion of the temple (nothing like the earlier one's majesty) and celebrate the dedication by keeping the feast of the Passover for the first time back in Jerusalem since it was destroyed. They have come back and God has used foreigners who had conquered them and many other peoples to allow them this privilege, and to help them, though they did not believe in the God of Israel.

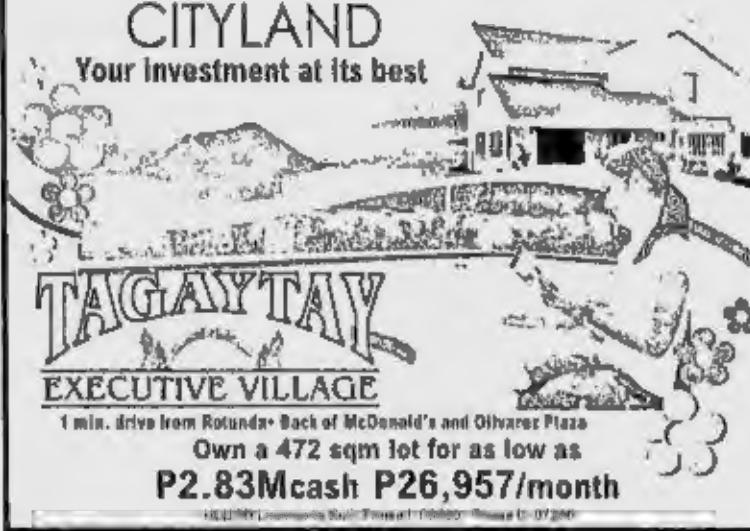

Who are the true brothers and sisters, mothers of Jesus? Not anyone bound by blood or marriage but those who hear the Word of God in Jesus, or are inspired by God and obey it—beyond any line of blood, marriage, religion, nation, economic bracket, personal connection. We are all called to be the family of God. We must remember and pray for and work with all peoples as the children of the one Father, kin to Jesus in the Spirit.

Dressed in a white sailor suit, a top hat—a red rose perched on top—Bip covered the gamut of human experience, and emotion, from going to war to running a matrimonial service.

In one famous sketch, "Public Garden," Marceau played all the characters in a park, from little boys playing ball to old women with knitting needles.

In 1949, Marceau's newly formed mime troupe was the only one of its kind in Europe. But it was only after a hugely successful tour across the United States in the mid-1950s that Marceau received the acclaim that would make him an international star.

Film appearances

"I have a feeling that I did for mime what (Andres) Segovia did for the guitar, what (Pablo) Casals did for the cello," he once told The Associated Press in an interview. Marceau started his own company, then in 1978 the International School of Mime-Drama.

In the past decades, he took Bip from Mexico to China to Australia. He also made film appearances—the most famous was Mel Brooks' 1976 film "Silent Movie," in which he had the only line of dialogue: "Non!"

A perforated ulcer nearly killed Marceau in the Soviet Union in December 1985. He was rushed home to Paris in critical condition, but bounced back to the stage five months later.

As he aged, Marceau kept performing, never losing the agility that made him famous.

On top of his Legion of Honor and his countless honorary degrees, he was invited to be a United Nations goodwill ambassador for a 2002 conference on aging.

"If you stop at all when you are 70 or 80, you cannot go on," he told the Associated Press in an interview in 2003. "You have to keep working."

Marceau was married three times and had four children. Funeral arrangements were not immediately known.

Pardon for plunderer?

EDITORIAL IT'S ONLY THE PHILIPPINES WHERE A PERSON convicted of a crime sets the condition for his pardon, instead of the chief executive, representing the government, setting the condition. We are seeing it in the case of disgraced former President Joseph Estrada, who said he would accept executive clemency only if it comes in the form of an absolute pardon. An absolute pardon releases the wrongdoer from punishment and restores the offender's civil rights without qualification.

We cannot understand the hurry in wanting to grant pardon or amnesty to Estrada who was convicted of plunder less than two weeks ago, after a six-year trial marked by delaying tactics by the defense. Presidential aspirants and legislative and executive officials are falling all over themselves proposing pardon or amnesty for Estrada to promote, they say, the cause of national reconciliation, peace-making and national reunification. What about the cause of the rule of law, justice, and crime and punishment? What about the cause of retribution for the highest official of the land found guilty of betrayal of the public trust? Does anyone give a hoot about these things?

Estrada's insistence on an absolute pardon shows that he does not believe he is guilty of the crime charged. The 212-page decision of the Sandiganbayan very clearly showed that he committed plunder by amassing P545 million from illegal gambling payoffs and a P189-million commission from stock market purchases using the SSS and GSIS funds. And yet he would have all these offenses wiped out from the record, and make it appear that he did not commit any crime against the people whose interest and welfare he was supposed to promote and protect as president.

Political expediency—that seems to be the paramount interest now. The government, judging from the statements and actions of the highest officials, would serve full pardon to Estrada on a silver platter to promote reconciliation and unity and stave off any move to destabilize the presidency. It is ironic that the latest statements regarding the grant of pardon to Estrada were made this month, the Rule of Law Month. The thinking of those who cry for pardon for Estrada seems to be: Justice and the rule of law be damned!

Estrada and his lawyers have chosen to follow the legal process, and have filed a motion for reconsideration before the Sandiganbayan. If the anti-graft court denies his motion, they can elevate the case to the Supreme Court. It would be best if they just continued on their present course. If, as they contend, Estrada is not guilty, then there is the possibility that the conviction could be reversed in the high court. Or, if it affirms the verdict, then we would have a final conviction that is a condition for the grant of a pardon. Estrada went through a six-year trial, no thanks to the delaying tactics of his lawyers. He can wait two or three more years while the wheels of justice continue to grind.

Even assuming that the appeals process is discontinued, which would mean that the conviction by the Sandiganbayan is a final conviction, making Estrada eligible for pardon, three or four months after the verdict is too short a waiting period for pardon to be granted. A short period indicates an almost indecent haste to mollify a person who has done a grievous wrong to his people.

In South Korea, former military dictators Chun Doo-hwan and Roh Tae-woo were pardoned in 1987 after spending two years in prison. Chun had been sentenced to life imprisonment and Roh to 17 years for their roles in the 1979 military coup that brought Chun to power, for the massacre of the pro-democracy protesters in Kwangju in 1980 and for the collection of millions of dollars in bribes from businessmen. A pardon after two years in South Korea, but here in the Philippines a pardon after only three or four months!

The culture of impunity is becoming embedded in the national psyche and national life. One can commit anything—extrajudicial killing, massive graft, plunder, etc.—and go scotfree, free to continue committing other crimes, provided one has influence, political clout and money. A pardon for Estrada will only promote the cause of impunity and encourage other high-ranking government officials to commit graft in the expectation that if prosecuted and found guilty later, they can always obtain a pardon. Is this the message we want to give to government officials and employees who are now supposedly engaged in an anti-graft campaign? Is this the example that we want to show to our generation and future generations?

Migrant culture

VIEWPOINT

Juan L. Mercado

THE EYE CLINIC SECRETARY ON THE LINE apologized, saying: "Sorry, sir. But we can't set an appointment. Your doctor migrated to the US. And her substitute isn't here yet."

Here was a small sign of the medical system's erosion due to the unanchored exodus of caregivers. Starting in the 1960s, departures included nurses, midwives and specialists in pediatrics, internal medicine to obstetrics and oncology, according to Jaime Galvez Tan, Fernando Sanchez and Virginia Balanon. "A health disaster is impending if nothing drastic is done."

That will take some doing. Eight million Filipinos now live and work in over 190 countries, and about 3,000 leave every day. They have midwifed today's "culture of migration... which permeates Filipino society," Maruja Asis of Scalabrini Migration Center observes.

"Migration has become a way of life," Asis told the East Asian Labor Migration Conference. Eyebrows arch if someone prefers to work here. "The expectation is: you'd like to work overseas, like many Filipinos."

This value now spans generations, despite strained families. A Scalabrini survey of 1,600 children nationwide found 47 percent would head for "faraway places with strange-sounding names," at the first chance. The proportion bolts to 60 percent among migrant workers' children. Example apparently is the best travel brochure.

Multiple generations OFW families are emerging. The New York Times cover story, "A Good Provider Is One Who Leaves," tracked three generations of a Pasay City swimming pool cleaner's family who became OFWs. "No country ever broke free from penury just by (an overseas worker's) remittances," Jason De Parle wrote.

"There is a widening of the income gap between households with remittances" and those without, Dr Chia Siow Yue of East Asian Development Network notes. "Consumption patterns are likewise distorted."

Crafting of policies that would harness remittances for uses beyond buying a cell phone or karaoke are of growing concern to the Philippines and other migrant-sending countries.

Indonesian illegal workers abroad now exceed 3.5 million, "Development Research News" reports. That's almost double Indonesia's 1999 labor migrants. Most head for Malaysia, Singapore and Middle Eastern countries. And the close to half-a-million migrants from Vietnam "come from middle-income households." They stream toward Taiwan, Malaysia, Korea and Japan. Trainee programs draw migrants to work in Tokyo or Seoul for "allowances."

Over 1.1 million Burmese have entered Thailand. Many are low-skilled, low-wage workers tapped for "3D (dirty, difficult and dangerous) jobs." There are over 2.5 million temporary workers in Malaysia, outrivalling those who leave. Almost a million workers are "irregular," coming mainly from Indonesia and the Philippines.

The first wave of OFWs left in the early 1970s. And that exodus surged, without a break, for almost four decades now. It shows little sign of ebbing.

This contrasts with what happened in Malaysia or Taiwan where robust economies and "brain gain" policies enticed professionals to return. "South Korea went from country of (migrant) origin to country of destination. (And) China succeeded in attracting its overseas citizens to return and invest."

Many Filipinos don't look back. Our "balik scientists" program never took off. "Economic difficulties are still crucial in people's decisions as to why they migrate abroad," Asis said. Poverty, lack of jobs and the resulting crimp on rising aspirations drive people to the nearest exit.

Mass media show the young that penury is not inevitable, that governments need not be rapacious. Many nations, in fact, have governments that are accountable to citizens. That contrasts with ping-pong shifts in governing here between crooked rulers like the Arroyo regime and a fraudulent opposition like the Estrada brigade.

Our government, then and now, uses migration to vent pressure from unemployment. But many still can't get jobs. Then and now, population grew without a pause. The country didn't make a "demographic transition" from high birth and death rates to low birth and death rates as did other countries.

Then and now, heftier benefits and better working conditions abroad draw the skilled and educated. A trained statistician from UP, my sister found herself in the first batch of migrants to Canada in the early 1970s. So did a medical technologist brother.

Ad hoc measures of the 1970s hardened by necessity into "institutionalization of migration" policy four decades later. The country today has well-developed institutional structures to serve migrant workers and those leaving for good.

"The landmark 1995 Migrant Workers and Overseas Filipinos Act was the first law in Asia that provides protection for OFWs," Asis points out. Nonetheless, there really "is not much interface between migration and development policies up to this point."

East Asian experience shows that only sound economic policies enabled labor-exporting countries to reverse their brain-and-brawn drain. The successful ones skirted the trap of "relying on labor deployment and remittances."

Don't yield to that temptation, the Asian Development Bank cautioned Filipino policymakers titillated by remittance inflows as large as 14 percent of the GDP.

Engaging participation of overseas Filipinos and reinforcing ties with countries where migrants head for are urgent in a globalizing global village, Asis adds. Failure would compel us to seek appointments with doctors abroad.

Worlds and words

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado de Quirós

(Conclusion)
 THERE ARE A COUPLE OF SPEECHES IN THIS book that make what I'm saying a little clearer. Their truths have certainly helped me go on in those times when I curse heaven for the gout, when I curse the landlord for the rent, and when I wonder what in God's name I'm doing, doing what I do when it doesn't seem to matter.

The first is the speech about Anne Frank and the power—and transcendence—of witnessing. There are several ways you can fight tyranny. You can take up arms against it, as the Polish Resistance did, and push it back with the power of physical force. You can speak out against it, as Mark Twain did, when the United States embarked on its imperial venture, and push it back with the power of moral force. Or you can bear witness to your times, if only by talking about the fury of young love and dreams amid the swirl of war and intolerance around you. And by doing so push back tyranny with the power of the word.

Anne Frank did the last. She did not, of course, survive Nazi-occupied Holland. But her diary, the scribbling of a young, innocent and hugely talented girl, full of life's longings, has become one of history's greatest single acts of defiance against insanity. More than the deaths of six million Jews who became unholy experiments in how fast human beings can be exterminated, the life of this one teenager has become the most powerful testament to the obscenity of the Holocaust and living proof—yes, living—of how long the human spirit can survive.

The patent lesson I draw from this is that truly victory and defeat are not always patent. It is perfectly possible to be defeated at the moment of one's triumph, as I have seen among many friends who have been maimed in spirit at the time of their seeming success. And it is perfectly possible to be victorious in defeat, as I have also seen in many friends who have found in their adversity, including prison, a bountiful source of joy and reward. In the end, history will have different things to say about who won and who lost.

But there's one other, infinitely more subtle, lesson I draw from this. Which is that victory and defeat are not just determined at the end of things, they are determined in the middle of things. Or they are not just found in the neither regions of posterity, they are found in the hard-edged space of the moment.

The power of Anne Frank's diary, whether read or watched in play or movie form, is the wonder and magic of her life and that of her family in that small space of time between their taking to hiding and being found out, in that small space of space between the wall panels of a warehouse in Amsterdam. Suddenly that crack of time expands to encompass eternity; suddenly that crack of space expands to encompass the universe. Suddenly that life quite literally takes a life of its own, transcending the borders of the before and after, transcending the borders of the within and without. Anne Frank's diary, which talks about life in that crack of time and space, is, to use the title of my first book, a flower pushing out of the rubble, as ferocious and magnificent a triumph of life as you can find.

That holds a special meaning for me, coming as I do from an activist background where I learned to believe for a while that things mattered only in the end. Victory was had only after a tyranny was brought down, a new life began only after the new world was built. Well, if Anne Frank's life has anything to say to me now, it is that that isn't true at all. The human worth is not found at the end of a life, it is found in the course of it. Victory and defeat are not found at the end of struggle, they are found in the struggle itself.

I think of that, and somehow it doesn't seem so bad that this country has gone to the dogs in the 20 years that I have been writing. But there's one other, infinitely more subtle,

"There's the Rub."

The other speech in this book that I draw comfort from has to do with reading and that wonderful book and movie, "Goodbye Mr. Chips." Mr. Chips is a teacher of classical literature in an Oxford school. When he begins teaching, which is before the First World War, the world is still kinder and more hospitable to his lessons, which represent the crowning glories of civilization. But his relevance gets to be challenged as time goes by.

The war comes, his students are drafted, and several die in lonely ditches in strange parts of the world. He himself despairs and wonders what the point of civilization is in a world where the barbarians have broken through the gates. The war ends, but his relevance isn't challenged less, it is challenged more. He now teaches classical literature in a world grown materialistic and utilitarian, one that defines getting ahead as getting going, getting rich, and getting laid.

Still Mr. Chips perseveres, trying as best he can to light the way for future generations with the wisdom of the past. And finally, in the evening of his life, he is forced to take the measure of himself, to ask himself what it all meant. Did his life really amount to anything? Did the things he taught really matter? Was the effort he exerted really worth it? He himself finds the answer to his questions while talking to an old friend. He says thoughtfully: "We did teach them to be more polite to each other, didn't we?"

A commonplace way to say the profoundest thing. A simple way to say the most awesome thing. For maybe that is what civilization is after all. If the generations that had come before had simply learned it, and if the generations that would come after would simply learn it, then maybe there would be no wars, no "salvagings," no rotating full circle through the circles of hell.

That is how I console myself these days, when the bones creak, and the roof leaks, and the world reeks of rain and ruin. I tell myself: "I have tried to teach them to be more polite to each other."

"Haven't I?"

OPINION

POLITICAL TIDBITSBelinda
Olivares-Cunanan

ONE OF THE MOST SENSIBLE COMMENTARIES I've read about the ZTE controversy was written by the Philippine Star's legal columnist Jose C. Sison. He lamented that the whole controversy is playing out in the court of public opinion, but this is not the best forum because all the sordid details are muddled together with the legitimate issues, instead of being properly sorted out in the interest of the public good. Sison asserted that in the court of public opinion, "the people themselves decide which of the varying versions are credible and believable without being guided by any rules on the appreciation of evidence. The more popular version is considered as the truth." Sison said that "the issues arising from the charges and counter-charges of corruption, bribery, sex, and even death threats should ... be brought before the court of law." In this court, "the truth will be determined more authoritatively and conclusively by the competent branch of government in accordance with clear and specific rules of evidence ... [and its] decision may be unpopular but is presumably correct, binding and conclusive."

Sison is right. Unfortunately, nowadays charges and counter-charges fly about with little evidence and the juicier tidbits outweigh reason. For instance, allegations about Comelec Chair Benjamin Abalos' "sexcapades" have flown thick and fast in the media and the Senate, but no evidence whatsoever was offered to back them up. I think the proper forum to bring up charges of attempted bribery against Abalos is the Office of the Ombudsman, which can, if evidence warrants, recommend the filing of an impeachment complaint in the House. No truth can be ferreted out in the Senate because it's a hangman's platform.

The problem with the Senate hearings is that the motive of the opposition senators is so obvious to link President Macapagal-Arroyo to the corruption charges. Look at the interminable debates on whether it was an agreement or a contract that was signed; no amount of reasoning could convince opposition senators that it was not a contract. Then, too, former Neda Director-General Romulo Neri is scheduled to be put on the witness stand tomorrow at the Senate, but critics are already putting words into his mouth, as though fearful that he might veer away from their agenda.

When the ZTE controversy erupted, I began my own research on the procedure for official development assistance (ODA) loans and I realized that the signing of the Boao agreement was only the initial step in a long process that requires 14 additional steps before the loan contract can be finalized. With the suspension of the ZTE deal by the President, this point does not need to be belabored, but I realize, too, that the government has been ineffective in explaining its side. Part of the reason is that when all the extraneous matters were factored in, e.g., the alleged offer of bribes to Joey de Venecia and Neri by Abalos, the latter's "sexcapades" and the overpricing, few could think straight about the issues anymore.

What the government should have done during the Senate hearing was to present the 17 steps in the loan process before Transportation Secretary Leandro Mendoza even testified. This would have shown that there is hardly anything as far as ZTE deal is concerned.

The Senate hearings eventually showed that the signing of the supply contract between ZTE and the government was only the first step while the signing of the loan agreement with the Chinese government is among the last. In dealing with other governments, however, the loan agreement is the first step. The ZTE supply contract signed in Boao last April was preceded by a "general framework agreement for economic cooperation" between the two governments and several feasibility studies. From Boao, the following necessary steps have yet to be concluded: as explained by Budget Secretary Rolando Andaya at the Senate, his department has to issue a "forward obligation authority" (doubtless because it has to eventually pay the loan), to be followed by Neda's certification that the negotiations have complied with all its conditions. After that, the Department of Finance has to issue a formal loan application with China's Export-Import Bank for the project, followed by our Monetary Board's approval in principle of the loan's proposed terms and conditions. Then the President has to issue a special authority to government officials to negotiate the loan agreement, after which it will be subjected to a review by an interagency committee composed of the Departments of Finance and Justice and Bangko Sentral. This review is routine for all foreign loan documents.

Only after all these steps are done can there be a signing of the loan agreement, but this is not the end of it. The Monetary Board needs to still give its final approval; the DOF has to issue a legal opinion on the loan, and the DOF has to submit to Eximbank all documents. Only after all these steps do the loan agreement and supply contract become effective.

Why do I detail this long procedure when the ZTE contract has already been suspended? It's to drive home how ineffective government's communication effort has been. No wonder its critics and detractors have been much better at destroying it. Government's ineffectiveness only heightens the perceptions that a lot of hanky-panky is going on.

Looking at the long process the ZTE loan has to undergo, I began to wonder exactly what the President meant when she told Neri to reject the P200 million bribe and just push that contract. Did she condone the incredible overprice, as her critics are asserting, or could it be, as her supporters say, that she was certain that the various steps in that long process would be able to filter the padded costs?

A quirky neighborhood

AT LARGE

Rina Jimenez-David

THERE IS "FULL PUPPET NUDITY" IN "AVENUE Q," and the scene is both so startling and leg-slapping funny that the audience hardly pays attention to Aiza Seguerra (as Gary Coleman) singing "You Can Be as Loud as the Hell You Want."

Indeed, there is good reason one cast member of the musical has dubbed the show "Dirty Sesame Street." While it bears similarities to the well-loved educational TV show for children, it transports "Sesame Street" to adult territory, replete with such issues as finding one's purpose in life—or just a meaningful, rewarding job, accepting one's sexuality, finding love and keeping it, racism, and porn on the Internet.

But despite this listing of themes, "Avenue Q" involves no heavy discourse or overly dramatic scenes. Instead, there is music and dancing, laughter and, of course, puppetry. I thought the combination quite apt, for the young adult characters (people in their early to late 20s) do belong to the "Sesame Street" (and in the local context, the "Barbobot") generation, reared on Big Bird, Ernie and Bert, Cookie Monster, Miss Piggy and Kermit the Frog, and the optimistic, idealistic world they all lived in.

How do you use this backdrop to tell the story of a college graduate and the friends he meets in a New York neighborhood, with some edginess and adult honesty? The formula is both simple and complicated: you use human actors posing as and interacting with puppets, and you make them sing deceptively "nice" tunes that nonetheless get to the dark heart of growing older and finding that life is far more entangled than one would wish.

I'D HEARD of "Avenue Q" long before it was staged in Manila, as my daughter Miya had downloaded the entire soundtrack onto her MP3 player months ago. My favorite song was "What Do You Do with a BA in English," not only because it spoke of Miya's unspoken fears, being herself a Comparative Literature major, but also because it gave voice to the anxieties of everyone who works with words. (As Conrad de Quiros expressed in his column yesterday, our words have yet to save somebody's life.)

But Princeton, our hero, is concerned not so much with changing and even conquering the world as with finding a job that will allow him to forego the allowance his parents send him, and pay the rent besides. Along the way, though, he stumbles upon concerns like finding his "purpose" in life, as well as upon the potential love of his life, the nursery school teacher Kate Monster.

Princeton also makes the acquaintance of a motley crew of characters: Brian and Christmas Eve, the inter-racial couple next door; Rod and Nicky, the inter-sexual(?) couple working out sexual and behavioral issues; Gary Coleman, yup, the former child star, as the apartment super; and Trekkie Monster, who stars in the raucous number "The Internet is for Porn."

In MANY ways, "Avenue Q" speaks of the coming of age of "Sesame Street's" children, of the sudden, jarring transition from childhood and college and its nice, safe environment, to "real life," and its nasty, contradictory and often-dangerous ways.

Rachel Alejandro, as Kate Monster and Lucy the Slut, is a stand-out in this production. She is completely believable (and lovable) as the retiring, hopelessly romantic Kate, and yet she brings the house down as Lucy the femme fatale, with her come-hither moves and va-va-voom voice.

Joe Trinidad, a theater veteran, is energetic, almost manic, in his varied roles, though I love him best as Trekkie Monster. The other showbiz veterans in the cast—Seguerra, Frenchie Dy (as Christmas Eve)—surprise with the ease with which they have made the transition to stage, though I did have problems with their adopted accents.

In Princeton and Rod, the conflicted investment banker, Felix Rivera has found his breakthrough roles. He is confident and charming, making both his rather bland characters interesting and funny. I say welcome to the newest male lead in the local stage scene!

The biggest kudos, though, go to co-directors Bobby Garcia and Chari Arellano, and Atlantis Productions for pulling off this witty, funny but highly complicated production. It couldn't have been easy, walking the talented cast through their lines and lyrics, while at the same time teaching them mastery over their puppets. It's a wonder how they were able to keep a tight rein on the proceedings onstage, which could at times be downright confusing.

"AVENUE Q" was written by the tandem of Robert Lopez and Jeff Marx, with book by Jeff Whitty. Lopez writes a message in the program in which he expresses astonishment and dismay that the musical "is opening in Manila—and that I'm not there to see it."

Lopez explains that he is "3 8ths Filipino" and had been planning to visit the country all his life, "Filipino" being a "secret" identity he had nursed while growing up because adults in his family had little to offer him by way of nurturing the Filipino part of him. While traces of that search for identity can be found in "Avenue Q," writes Lopez, the musical is not "my personal statement of racial confusion ... far from it."

So let's just say that "Avenue Q" is about many things: about being young and naive in New York, about loving and losing and finding again, about identity and relating, about how, as the final song goes, it may "suck to be you" at the moment, but it's only "for now."

Unfortunately, the local production's "for now" has come to an end, as it has just had its last weekend performance. But people involved with the production promise "Avenue Q" will be back for another run in December. In which case, you have plenty of time to prepare for a visit with the quirkiest people in your neighborhood.

Favila and the influence of the moderate

NEWSSTAND

John Nery

HUMOR, LIKE THE ELABORATE COURTESIES our "honorable" lawmakers extend to one other in their "august" chambers, oils the legislative mill. (Whether their rococo language is an inadvertent joke is altogether another matter.) Even the usually strident Miriam Defensor-Santiago, for example, can be relied on to sprinkle her locutions with frabjous comment.

At the Senate joint committee hearings on the National Broadband Network last Thursday, the former judge played the Speaker Jose de Venecia card, eliciting from Transportation Secretary Leandro Mendoza his recollection that "the son [whistleblower Joey de Venecia] was introduced to me by the father."

How did the Speaker introduce his son, Santiago persisted. "Did he say, This is my son, with whom I am well-pleased?"

Unfortunately, the Gospel reference was entirely lost on an untransfigured Mendoza.

Humor, Wittgenstein said, is "not a mood but a way of looking at the world." By that standard, we should not say that Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr., now on his 14th year in the Senate, was in an atrociously bad mood last Thursday; only that he regards testimony before the Senate as vulnerable to obfuscation and windbagery.

Going over the notes I took during last Thursday's hearing at the Senate, I count three of Pimentel's sharp-edged jokes. (I'm sure there were others, but I must have missed them while freezing in the session hall.) If, as Wittgenstein again assures us, "a serious...philosophical work could be written consisting entirely of jokes," surely a listing of Pimentel's apertus won't be out of place in a largely political column. (Besides, I can't find them documented in news reports.)

At the hearing, Mendoza cut a Renganesque figure: I do not mean charismatic and eloquent, but generally, even loopy, disengaged. ("Clueless," the newpapers said the following day.) At one point, Mendoza indicated that Assistant Secretary Lorenzo Formoso (for the nth time) could answer the question at hand more competently. Pimentel egged the designated Hitler on:

"Mr. Formoso, please come to the rescue." In his opening statement, Mendoza sought to triangulate what he called the "unbridled and ruthless arena of media reporting" against the Senate. He wasn't merely posing, however. In one exchange with Pimentel, over Mendoza's seeming nonchalance regarding news reports about the NBN project, he was asked whether he still read the papers. Mendoza replied: "I do not know what to believe in media anymore."

Pimentel's rebuttal: "That's right. I think the feeling is mutual."

The most resonant of all his sallies, however, came at the start of the hearing. When Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano, the chairman of the Blue Ribbon committee, noted that Secretary Romulo Neri, an alleged bribe, could not attend the second hearing because he had fallen ill, Pimentel belatedly asked the chairman for a clarification.

What is he sick of, Mr. Chairman? Intestinal flu, Cayetano replied. Pimentel countered: "Is it intestinal flu... or the lack of intestinal fortitude?"

I am rather more sanguine about the President's decision to suspend the NBN project than some of my colleagues in media. Yes, the suspension is a halfway measure, really neither here nor there, since the Supreme Court already issued a temporary restraining order. Yes, the suspension is a tactical feint, intended to lull the Senate into considering a premature conclusion to the hearings. Yes, the suspension is a political sop, meant to arrest growing public disgust over the NBN project's sordid details.

All the same, I think the decision can be considered a small victory for the moderates in the Cabinet (to call them a bloc would be to give them a form they do not have). Favila already laid the predicate, as it were, for a suspension last Thursday, when he explained before the Senate that he was willing to sit down with his Chinese government counterpart to discuss alternatives.

"It is worth exploring with my counterpart what these options and variations [are]. I heard about BOO, BOT, cancellation, abrogation and so on and so forth," he said at the hearing, answering the one question addressed to him.

It is a victory, because some in the administration are laying the groundwork for amending the project or scrapping it altogether. Too little, too late? Yes, but we'll take any government's every attempt to respond to public opinion.

Besides, this is the way politics at this level is done. Since the arrangement requires the consent of another government, the most diplomatic course of action (aside from a collective shrugging of the shoulders on account of the legal injunction) is to call for a review. The hardliners (no, not the ones running China) will balk, in part because they know even a cancellation won't stop an independent Senate from continuing with its investigation. But reason prevailed, at least in part, last Saturday. Let's encourage those who made it possible.

I see the same moderating influence at work in the apparent decision by ex-President Joseph Estrada to accept an absolute pardon, if and when it is offered by his successor in Malacañang.

Having taken a populist position ever since his plunder trial began, Estrada unnecessarily painted himself into a corner. Now the moderates in his camp have found the perfect excuse for him to wiggle out.

I myself do not agree that a convicted plunderer deserves an absolute pardon, but—my point—I do understand how the absolute can be relativized.

I can't resist. Here's another quote from the surprisingly garrulous Wittgenstein, in anticipation of tomorrow's NBN hearing: "Someone who knows too much finds it hard not to lie."

To love or be loved

OUR TEACHER IN PHILOSOPHY ONCE ASKED OUR CLASS whether it is harder to love or to be loved. I did not have a clue on how to answer the question, but I took it to heart. After a few bottles of cheap wine and nights spent until dawn, the question gained contour. But instead of finding an answer, the first thing that came to my mind was another question: What is to love?

I am not entirely sure if what I have arrived at is true, given the limited experiences I have. The only thing I am sure of is that love entails some letting go. It is allowing the other to grow, to pursue his happiness even if that pursuit does not include my own. Love keeps one happy with the thought that the one you let go will be happy, even if it means being without him. As Marcel would put it, "To love anybody is to expect something from him, something which can neither be defined nor foreseen, it is at the same time in some way to make it possible for him to fulfill this expectation." In setting him free, the only expectation I can hold now is that he will be happy. But it is by letting go that I can give him the possibility of being happy.

Even without this other person, loving transforms life into living. Love puts action into life. Life is not life when lived in passivity. Life becomes dynamic when one loves. Love colors the boredom that the routine of life brings. Breathing is no longer just for the purpose of keeping the self alive, it becomes living for the loved one.

Is loving the same as having? It is not. If I claim ownership of someone, he will not be the same person I loved when he was not my possession. Owning something is the same as personalizing it. If an object is personalized, it loses its character. It becomes a reflection of the self. When this happens, then what I love is myself, not the other.

Having someone makes it so much harder to let him go. But if one just loves with respect for the other person, then letting go becomes less difficult. It will never be easy, because there will always be a desire to have that person. Maybe it's human nature to be greedy and to want what one loves. But in the course of having, love disappears.

So loving someone is hard. It seems to be having but it's not. It is a conscious action so that it is not allowed to turn into ownership. It is a giving in to one's very nature, to one's desire to want the best for the loved one. But at the same time, it also entails some control over one's natural impulse to own.

But what is it to be loved? I believe that being loved entails utmost patience. Being loved is an act based on the other person. It is hard in the sense that one cannot control how the other loves. It is like having a stranger hold one's hand. There is fear that this person will lead one to an unknown place. There is apprehension that it will into a grasp. What if he does not let go? The only thing that can loosen this grasp is time.

Patiently waiting for time to knock some sense into the other or the self is probably one of life's hardest tasks. Time stretches into infinity when one is holding on to someone even if it is not reciprocated. There is again this notion that one can have this person but the truth is, one can never have him or anyone else for that matter.

Is it not hard to know that a person does not love you the way you want him to? It is one of life's greatest tensions: the incongruence between how one is being loved and how one loves. To be loved is also hard because it involves acknowledging the possibility that one can never control how the other person loves. It involves an uncertainty which can condense into fear.

So which is harder between loving and being loved? I still haven't come to a conclusion. The intensity by which love impacts a person can make everything both easy and hard. To love someone makes it easier to live, but at the same time, life can be harder because that someone can never be owned. To be loved entails patience which forms character. But it also involves a fear, an uncertainty.

The more important question is, will love ever be easy? I want to believe it is, but life proves otherwise.

GMA's future written in Estrada verdict

WE SAW IT COMING. AFTER SIX YEARS of litigation, former President Joseph Estrada has been found guilty beyond reasonable doubt by the Sandiganbayan.

We have now sent an erring former president to jail. This guilty verdict should embolden all of us to send more errant ones regardless of the magnitude of their wrongdoing or the height of their positions. No one is above the law. Those who break it should be made to pay for their misdeeds and the damage they cause.

The exposés on large-scale corruption and on questionable deals and bribery that defrauded the government of billions of pesos under Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's watch, if found to be true, would make Estrada's offense just like a simple traffic violation.

We are not sure if she would willingly step down in 2010 when her term ends, assuming of course that her paid lackeys in the House of Representatives do not succeed in changing the present system of government, or that she does not abolish Congress and declare martial law and keep herself in power indefinitely, like Marcos did.

When that happens, she will not hold her usurped power for long as the restlessness of the disgruntled junior officers in the military will prove difficult to contain, and as her equally unpopular friend George W. Bush will have long been out of office by then and replaced by a less friendly Democrat.

And when she is finally down, she will most likely be made to face all the charges now being leveled against her.

MSU needs Muslim as president

THE VARIOUS SECTORS OF THE MUSLIM community in the country and several Christian and Lumad leaders and organizations hail the news that very soon Dr. Macapado A. Muslim will take over as president of Mindanao State University. He is definitely the best man for the job!

This is long overdue; in 2005, the Malacañang-authorized search committee chaired by former ChED Commissioner Cristina Padolina unanimously chose Dr. Muslim (No 1 out of 21 screened applicants) to succeed Dr. Camar A. Umpa. Unfortunately, that succession did not come to pass. Instead, then newly retired police general Ricardo R. de Leon was appointed as a transition president (acting president) to restore peace and order, reportedly for a short duration of only six months to a maximum of one year.

To some extent De Leon has succeeded in doing that. In the meantime, however, the academic standards of MSU have continued to deteriorate severely. A professional academician and proven educational administrator must now take over. With extensive experience in university governance, capped by 11 years' experience as Chancellor of the now rapidly developing MSU Campus in General Santos City and concurrent member of the MSU Board of Regents, Dr. Muslim can surely restore the lost academic excellence of MSU, especially on its main campus in Marawi City. An alumnus of MSU Marawi Campus, Dr. Muslim is a native son of Marawi City, which is certainly a significant strength for the MSU presidency especially in ensuring stability on campus.

Dr. Muslim obtained his PhD and MA degrees in political science from the University of Hawaii as an East-West Center scholar, and his Masters in Public Administration from the University of the Philippines. Recognizing his impressive performance as chancellor of MSU-General Santos for two terms (December 1995 to March 27, 2007), Dr. Muslim was conferred the Outstanding Alumnus Award by the University of the Philippines National College of Public Administration and Governance and NCPAG Alumni Association on June 16, 2007.

In their separate letter-appeals, several leaders and groups within and outside of the 10-campus MSU System urge President Macapagal-Arroyo to cause the immediate release of the appointment of Dr. Muslim as the next regular president of MSU, which she had reportedly signed two weeks ago. MSU deserves nothing less. The immediate release of Dr. Muslim's appointment is politically significant given the current security crisis in Mindanao.

Becoming a population of idiots

I HEARD A RADIO BROADCAST recently, during a visit to San Francisco, by someone named Michael Sullivan who spoke of feeling "incredibly sad" at the sight of something in Manila. His radio essay was aired over NPR (National Public Radio, the US equivalent of the BBC in London to which I tune in regularly in Hong Kong). It was a thoughtful, incisive piece without a hint of disparagement or condescension; he seemed genuinely sorry about something which, to him, reflected an unfortunate aspect of the situation in the Philippines.

The sadness felt by Sullivan (whom I Googled and learned is NPR's South & Central Asian correspondent) was apparently caused by the sight of long queues in front of a building in Manila known as the POEA, which he spelled out. The other countries in Asia which he covers are famous, as everyone knows, for exports such as cars and TVs (Japan), clothes and toys (China), computers and flowers (Taiwan), gems and textiles (Thailand), and furniture and handicrafts (Indonesia).

Sullivan's depression apparently stemmed from the fact that the Philippines' main export is its citizens—10 percent of the population, he stated, are migrant workers abroad. Describing the lines of people outside the POEA building as "looking excited but nervous," he noted that "most looked weary and resigned."

He interviewed an Emilio Antonio who told him he was glad to be working overseas because "We are like beggars, we cannot choose." Sullivan then spoke to a woman who said she was looking forward to earning $400 a month as a housemaid, even as she was leaving her husband and children behind. Their stories reflected the old clichéd dream of going abroad to better one's lot, and the sadness which many of the migrant workers feel at leaving home.

On my flight to the United States, I had read "The Inheritance of Loss" by the fine young Indian writer Kiran Desai, who won the prestigious British Booker Prize this year. Recounting the lives of Third World nationals who immigrate to find work in the West, she tells a story of a young Nepali man struggling with demeaning dead-end jobs in New York City. And she also describes an Indian professional who has done well in the Midwest. When the professional's father arrives from India to visit his son, Desai describes the son's feelings thus:

"He knew what his father thought: that immigration, so often presented as a heroic act, could just as easily be the opposite; that it was cowardice that led many to America, fear marked the journey, not bravery; a cockroachy desire to scuttle to where you never saw poverty... never had to suffer a tug to your conscience; where you never heard the demands of servants, beggars, bankrupt relatives, and where your generosity would never be openly claimed; where by merely looking after your own wife-child-dog-yard you could feel virtuous. Experience the relief of being an unknown transplant to the locals and hide the perspective granted by the journey. Ohio was the first place he loved, for there he had at last been able to acquire poise..."

This made me think of transplanted Pinoys and the pride we feel for those of our "kababayan" who do well abroad, even as we often forget the multitudes who struggle abroad and end up at the bottom of the pile.

Desai's earlier book "Hulabaloos in a Guava Orchard" (1998) is about a young man named Sampath who starts out as his family's black sheep who then morphs into a sage when he decides to alter his life by establishing residence atop a guava tree. Befuddled people who first think he's mad soon decide he's a mystic; they come from far and near to peer up at the branches to ask him questions about life, which he answers in convoluted riddles.

In this book, Desai has a passage in which she mentions a member of the "Indian Atheist Society" observing Sampath perched on top of the guava tree while crowds gather around him, hanging on to his enigmatic answers and words of weird advice. This prompts the atheist to think that "People like Sampath obstructed the progress of this nation [India]... they smothered any body who tried to make a stand against the vast uneducated hordes, swelling and growing toward the biggest population of idiots in the world, even as minuscule little countries like Taiwan and the Philippines were forging ahead..."

This may be a curious statement to make, even though Taiwan and the Philippines are indeed "minuscule" in population compared to India, the world's largest democracy. Though Taiwan has in many ways been ahead of India technologically and commercially, considering the Philippines as "forging ahead" poses the question as to which field—in politics perhaps? With corruption in India often exposed and punished, this makes Desai's comparison interesting.

So even as Filipinos today demand the ouster of Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, she apparently still doesn't rank with TI's most corrupt leaders. The irony is that, even though we're notorious for having short memories and forgiving natures, we have some perverse citizens who clamor for Joseph Estrada's return as well as those who revere Ferdinand Marcos. In fact, the recent report about new school textbooks extolling Marcos as a great leader shows how history is being whitewashed and rewritten. Such a travesty of the truth is, no doubt, due to the machinations of those surviving Marcos relatives in various positions of power—not the least of them the bizarre Imelda, who persists in making the Philippines (to borrow the words of Desai's atheist) "look like growing toward the biggest population of idiots in the world."

Isabel T. Escoda has written about Filipinos in Hong Kong in her books "Letters from Hong Kong," "Hong Kong Postscript" and "Puoy Abroad."

Is military report on license plate being 'doctored'?

I CAN SMELL SOMETHING FISHY BEHIND the sudden decision of the Armed Forces of the Philippines to fight all the way to the Supreme Court (instead of at the Court of Appeals only, as it previously said) attempts of the family of Jonas Burgos to get a copy of the investigation report on the "theft" of the license plate (of an impounded jeep) that ended up on the vehicle used in his kidnapping. (INQUIRER, 9/17/07)

The name of the game is "buying time." That is, the AFP must create an impression that it, indeed, has nothing to hide in the report, with AFP Chief of Staff Gen. Herogenes Esperon himself reportedly agreeing to the release of the report if the Court of Appeals would so order; then backtracking on that commitment, with the government lawyers "opting" to exhaust all legal avenues to prevent the release of the report, by initially filing a motion for reconsideration with the Court of Appeals, and then eventually appealing to the Supreme Court. This will surely take considerable time; meanwhile, so many untoward events (read: manipulations) will suddenly occur. For example, duly signed international contracts are lost; so "doctored" reports—one may already be in process—cannot be far behind.

In fairness to all concerned, and to erase the lingering doubts about the AFP's sincerity regarding this issue, the immediate submission of the controversial investigation report should be ordered by the court for its safekeeping until the Supreme Court rules to have it released to the Burgos family or returned to the AFP.

De Quiros urged: Take on GMA

IF CONRADO DE QUIROS IS REALLY that animated to see Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo suffer the same fate as Joseph Estrada's (INQUIRER, 9/18/07), why doesn't he lead the charge to file cases against her? The way he pulverizes GMA indicates he has the goods on her. Another conviction can only help the country's political picture.

Nude photos and INQUIRER responsibility

I AM DISAPPOINTED AND DISGUSTED THAT a respectable newspaper should feature a picture of naked men, exposed from top to bottom. (INQUIRER, 9/17/07). It may be interesting to some, including the INQUIRER, and therefore, the photo could incite young minds to undue and irresponsible prurience, and provide fodder for salacious talk. The INQUIRER cannot evade responsibility for this.

Is this the INQUIRER's brand of so-called journalistic freedom, something that many in the media industry invoke irresponsibly? Is this the INQUIRER's way of selling the newspaper?

If the answer to both is yes, I implore the INQUIRER to reassess its responsibility to society.

The INQUIRER shapes minds and consciences. This grave responsibility cannot and should not be abused under the guise of freedom. Otherwise, the INQUIRER would be no different from the cheap tabloids parading human flesh and arousing plain lust.

What a shame that would be!

Fatuous questions and senators

I WAS LISTENING TO THE Senate hearings over the radio and I could not help feeling so frustrated and sick to my stomach. Regardless of the monies of the senators who pressed for the investigations, I wanted to know what the deals were all about.

Administration senators were on panic mode, trifling with the most inane ques-— Sen. Joker Arroyo hinted that the Senate was just being used in the NBN inquiry as a collection agency for "commissioners." He was clearly implying that although he believed there was plenty of dirty money lining the pockets of people involved in contracts with the government, it was pointless to delve into the irregularities. It was just a "simple matter" among duves squabbling over the loot. What the heck has happened to that guy?

Sen. Miriam Santiago was more angry and obsessed with the sex life of a witness rather than with the substance of his testimony about President Macapagal-Arroyo's complicity in the "Hello Garci" election fraud. Santiago even wanted his mensus and his mistress subpoenaed. When will we ever have enough of that woman's rantings and ravings? Tell me again, when did she say she was going to jump off the plane, please?

Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile was more dissembling with legal technicalities and gobbledegook that detracted from the substance of the NBN controversy. His mission was obviously to obfuscate.

Sen. Francisco Pangilinan was his disingenuous self as usual. After so many questions to the witness who spilled the beans on First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo in relation to the NBN stink, he wrapped it up with an assurance from the witness that the latter had no personal knowledge of the President's complicity in the skullduggery. Fine, let's grant the wife does not always know what the husband is doing. As it panned out later, the President was reported to have gone to China to personally witness the signing of the NBN contract. Back home, she would declare: "We must honor or government contracts!"

Hello, again?

Powerful, indecent

I FOUND THE SEPT. 19 EDITORIAL, "Indecent haste," a little baffling. While the body seemed logical, the title confused me. Was it meant to imply that if politicians waited a while before offering a pardon to Estrada, a pardon wouldn't look so indecent?

My feeling is politicians wield their power indecently. Not just politicians, but most people in power. I suppose they have the misguided notion that when the law gives them discretionary power, they assume they can do whatever they want.

I believe they understand the word wrongly. "Discretion" entails wisdom. When a person in power is given discretionary power, it only means that the law is insufficient and the person in power has to use his God-given wisdom, his intelligence as a well-informed individual to make the right decision.

There is no freedom here. There is only foresight or lack thereof. Two choices: right or wrong.

'Hello, Garci' will keep on haunting Arroyo

"DOBLE IS ALREADY FINISHED as a witness. He needs somebody else to back up his story." This is a statement coming from Sen. Richard Gordon. (INQUIRER, 9/17/07)

What is the truth, Senator Gordon? If I may ask? If Vidal Doble Jr. is not a credible witness, what about the taped conversation between Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo and then-Comelec Commissioner Virgilio Garcillano? Is it a product of the technical expertise of the agents of the Intelligence Service of the Armed Forces of the Philippines or just an electronic anomaly plucked out of thin air by the agents to embarrass Ms Arroyo?

This issue will not die even if Senator Gordon and all of Ms Arroyo's apologists succeed in stonewalling the Senate inquiry. It will haunt Ms Arroyo for the rest of her political life.

Bolinao beach clean again after 5 years

BOLINAO, PANGASINAN - MORE THAN five years after a massive fish kill hit this town and rendered the Guiguiwanen beach unfit for swimming, the water in the seaside village is clear again, residents and officials here said.

Margaret Celeste, chair of the Bolinao Marine Ecological Fund Foundation, which led a clean up of coastal areas and rivers here on Friday, said the good condition of the Guiguiwanen beach was a "pleasant surprise" to those who joined the activity.

"We are happy that the water of Guiguiwanen beach is clear again. This is a public beach where people can once again enjoy swimming," Celeste said.

Due to aquaculture activities at the Kakuputan Channel, which separates this town from Anda, water at the Guiguiwanen beach turned murky and caused skin rashes among beach goers in the past years.

The governments of Bolinao and Anda have since restricted the operation of fish cages and pens in the channel following fish kills, the most recent of which hit Anda this year.

Celeste said the garbage collected by residents in this year's coastal cleanup were mostly biodegradable, like dried sea grasses and seaweeds, coconut husks and leaves.

She said less non-biodegradable garbage were collected this year compared to the past years, but volunteers still gathered 15 sacks of bottles and plastic bags and wrappers from the 3-km stretch of the beach.

"Sadly, most of the plastic bags were containers of [fish] feed, perhaps thrown into the sea by fish cage caretakers and which found their way to the beach," Celeste said.

In Anda town, local officials said structures impeding water flow at the Kakuputan Channel would be demolished to prevent fish kills and pollution in the channel.

Mayor Nestor Pulido said there are about 20 fish pens and 22 fish cages in the channel hit by a massive fish kill in June.

"The Kakuputan Channel is the narrowest turn from Tambao Bay [in Bantay town] to Bolinao and based on studies, water should flow freely in the channel so that it can flush out pollutants to the sea," Pulido said.

He said he had ordered the gradual demolition of fish structures in the area and had adopted a policy that fish pens will no longer be allowed in this town.

"We would prefer fish cages, because these allow water to flow," Pulido said.

"We are now identifying exits and entry points of water that goes around the island, so we can also free them from fishing structures that block water flow," he added.

He said he implemented a gradual demolition of the fish structures after bangus (milkfish) producers asked him to allow them to stay for a while to recoup their losses from the June fish kill.

At least P100 million worth of bangus were lost during the recent fish kill.

"Of course, we perfectly understand that. So, we have been demolishing fish pens in a systematic manner," Pulido said. Yolanda Sotelo-Fuertes and Gabriel Cardona, Inquirer Northern Luzon

"Nayong Pilipino sa Clark Expo" is how this improved part of the park is called.

By Tonette Orejas
Inquirer Central Luzon

CLARK FREEPORT—THE MAMMOTH YET IDLE government asset that is the P3-billion Expo Pilipino here has finally gotten a new lease on life.

"The concept is to make it's an extension of the Nayong Pilipino in Pasay City," said Crispin Cadiang, NPF's coordinator for this P40-million undertaking.

The move, led by NPF executive director Charito Planas, is seen in business circles as daring because no private group has actually tried to turn it around and get over its tarnished past.

Ramos legacy

Built by the administration of former President Fidel Ramos to celebrate the centennial of Philippine Independence in 1998, the Expo Pilipino was mothballed in 1999, on orders of former President Joseph Estrada, after the Senate's blue ribbon committee found proof of graft in the project.

In the business sense, however, the park still teems with facilities and features that can bring in income to the government's coffers.

This was what convinced Planas to try the proposition of Rene Diaz, former presidential adviser for Northern Luzon, said Cadiang.

Than leave it to deteriorate or entirely go to waste, the NPF did its bit by using what remains of Expo Pilipino's pre-colonial and colonial plazas, repairing or improving those or adding new attractions to the place, Cadiang said.

In doing so, it shared with the Clark Development Corp. the task of demonstrating that the Expo Pilipino is still feasible as a public or private enterprise.

Existing structures

Still undergoing repairs are the Plaza, Arcadia, the museum of ecclesiastical and folk arts, and the outdoor theater.

The additional features are the Labuad Kapampangan, a mini-park of Pampanga culture, and the Kariman, a restaurant made of bamboo and nipa that sits right next to a vegetable garden and chicken farm.

Another feature is the "Dambana ng Paghirom (Shrine of Healing)," which is set to get its own garden of herbal plants.

Three of seven lodging cottages have been finished and are available for overnight rest or retreats.

The executive lounge, all made of hardwood and native materials, has hosted small conferences and meetings.

COTABATO CITY - A land dispute involving members of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) in Datu Saud, Ampatuan, Magundanao was the culprit behind clashes with Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) guerrillas on Sunday, a rebel official said yesterday.

Von Al Haq, chair of the MILF ceasefire team, said on Sunday militiamen, led by a certain Tamano, attacked the group of former MNLF commander Datu Mando Tambuangan in Barangay Kitango, who were then harvesting their crops.

The two factions have been contesting ownership of a tract of land in the town, according to Eid Kabalu, MILF civil-military chief.

He said there was an undetermined number of casualties in both sides.

Kabalu said at the initial clash, MILF forces remained calm.

But he said the militiamen later targeted the MILF camp in Kitango, killing one rebel.

With the involvement of the MILF, Kabalu said the gunfight raged for several hours.

Rights of drug suspects violated, court says

By Donna Demetillo
and Elmer Kristian Dauigoy
Inquirer Northern Luzon

(Last of two parts)

BAGUIO CITY—PANGASINAN Gov Amado Espino Jr said that with the implementation of Republic Act No. 9165 (Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act of 2002), the Philippines now had the best law on illegal drugs in Southeast Asia.

However, Espino, a former representative and one of the authors of RA 9165, said there was much to be desired. "The only problem is on its implementation," he said.

Judge Antonio Reyes, who handles the Special Anti-Drugs Court in this city, said the "haste" by which RA 9165 had been crafted "opened the floodgates to the violation of the rights of the accused."

Citing cases decided by the Regional Trial Court's Branch 61, Reyes said Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) agents had violated the rights of the accused by enforcing warrantless ar-evidence planted. The first case that Reyes handled in 2002 under RA 9165 was dismissed after the police planted evidence on the accused, Bily Eustaquio and Tracy Lacmen.

"There can be no other reasons for the patent inconsistencies of the police officers in the details of these cases than the fact that the buy-bust operation was fictitious," Reyes said in his decision. "The police involved in these cases simply arrested and made up the charges against the two accused who have been languishing in jail."

In the case of Samsodin Dianaan, who was jailed in 2005 and acquitted in May this year, Reyes said "there [was] hardly evidence to show the details pertaining to the impending drug deal and if at all, the testimony of ... the poseur-buyer (a PDEA agent) was a display of incoherence and inconsistency."

Reyes, in another decision acquitting Leonard Chaloy of charges of selling a half brick of marijuana (340 grams), said the police "failed to observe standard operating procedure for a buy-bust operation."

Chaloy was arrested and jailed in 2005 and spent two years in prison before his acquittal.

In another case, Reyes acquitted Rex Cayang-o of charges of selling 23.75 grams of dried marijuana when the PDEA's civilian agent, who did not have police training, bungled an operation.

Records from the RTC Branch 61 showed that the most common reasons behind the acquittal and dismissal of cases in his court are: dubious buy-bust operations, lack of buy-bust money in operations, contradicting testimonies of arresting offi-

SPECIAL REPORT

If they caught someone with a sachet of vestsin (monosodium glutamate) mixed with only traces of shabu, the suspect is booked," he said.

Reyes is also displeased that while RA 9165 had set graded penalties in drug possession cases, it did not apply the same requirement on the sale of illegal drugs.

"I pity them (accused) because they are detained straight away," he said.

Reyes said that under the old law, RA 6425, many of the accused were able to post bail or pleaded guilty to incur lighter penalties such as probation.

"There is less room for police misconduct if penalties are less harsh," he said.

Prosecutor's view

Baguio Prosecutor Conrado Catral Jr disagrees. "I don't think [RA 9165 is harsh]. Otherwise, it should have been rendered unconstitutional by the Supreme Court," he said.

"I don't think that making the penalty stiff makes [the law] harsh. The drug menace is there but it is only a matter of prosecuting and catching the right person and [conducting arrests in] a regular manner to avoid insinuations of illegal arrest or planting of evidence."

Asked if stiffer penalties made RA 9165 more effective, Catral said: "No. Otherwise, drug cases would have been eradicated."

"In my opinion, [stiffer penalties] are not deterrent [to crime]. Even during the time when we had death penalty, heinous crimes still existed," he said.

Reyes, however, considers RA 6425 a "better law."

"It is not the severity of punishment that is a deterrent to crime. It's the certainty of punishment. RA 6425 was a better law because it had degrees [to determine corresponding penalties]," he said.

Understanding RA 9165

Supt. Oliver Enmodias, PDEA director of the Cordillera, said that since the PDEA was "relatively young" (it was created in 2002 when RA 9165 was passed), its agents had yet to have a firm understanding or knowledge of the new antidrugs law.

It is for this reason, he said, that monthly refresher training sessions on RA 9165 were given to PDEA agents. Training sessions on proper arrests and investigative skills are also conducted regularly.

Enmodias said the PDEA in the Cordillera had hired a legal officer and four case monitoring personnel to review dismissed or acquitted cases and recommend if these could be revived.

He said their legal officer also coordinated with the prosecution and helped PDEA agents in court proceedings and hearings.

But Reyes said: "[The PDEA] should be perfect [in handling cases] because they are dealing with human lives [here]."

"If a doctor makes a mistake and kills a patient, he cannot just make an excuse that he's still perfecting his skills. They should not fault the court [for the acquittals]. It's a good thing that the court is here to correct their imperfections," he said.

Catral said he did not fail in reminding the PDEA about its shortcomings.

"I already told them the problem because they were complaining about the rush [in issuing] decisions [acquitting] the suspects. They kept on bungling their cases," he said.

While he said the police and the PDEA may have identified the suspects as known drug users or pushers, "sad to say ... [there was] irregularity in the procedures in effecting the arrest of a respondent."

Enmodias said the slow pace of court proceedings would also affect the clarity and consistency of testimony that a PDEA agent might give in court.

Bungling cases

He said most agents handled several cases at a time and they might confuse one set of facts for another because of their "re-lance on memory."

"Nalito sila sa dami ng cases [They are confused because of the volume of cases]," he said.

But Reyes said no complaint had been filed against erring

To solve this, Enmodias has asked his agents to use an investigative notebook to record details of events and operations so they can refer to this during hearings.

Some of the law's provisions are also difficult to comply with.

Enmodias cited a provision requiring the presence of representatives of the media and the Department of Justice before the marking, inventorying, and photographing of confiscated drugs. This is especially difficult to comply with if their operations are conducted late at night, he said.

Complying with law

In remote areas of the Cordillera, there are no crime laboratories and confiscated drugs have to be taken to the city for testing. This situation would make complying with the law's 72-hour requirement for the filing of charges difficult.

Enmodias said cases of violence only occurred in instances where offenders resist arrest, and agents were compelled to use force to subdue the suspect.

"On our own, we investigate our people and provide constant guidance," he said.

Erring agents are reprimanded and warned for the first offense, but that administrative cases may also be filed depending on the gravity of the offense and the number of offenses.

Enmodias said that bungling of evidence was also a ground for the filing of administrative cases against agents. A provision in RA 9165 penalizes law enforcers who either fail to account for confiscated drugs, plant evidence or bungle cases.

But Reyes said no complaint had been filed against erring

PDEA agents or policemen. "The problem is that nobody is bold enough to fight back," he said.

"They don't catch big fishes. Most of the people they arrest are poor or illiterate. How can these people file charges when they don't have enough money or don't know any better?" he said.

Oversight committee

With the problems now bounding the government's campaign against illegal drugs, Espino said it was now up to the congressional oversight committee on dangerous drugs whether to amend the law or not.

The committee, which is headed by the chairpersons of the Senate committee on public order and illegal drugs and the House committee on dangerous drugs, is composed of seven senators and seven representatives.

"The role of this oversight committee is really to oversee the implementation of the law and look into its defects so that 10 years," Espino said.

For instance, the law provides that after the passing of the Professional Law, nearly one year from the PDEA's creation, which is supposed to be responsible for the recruitment and training of all agents and personnel.

"It has been five years [since the law was implemented]. But I don't know what happened to that now. My intention then [in having that provision included] was to have professional and specially trained agents in the PDEA," Espino said.

The PDEA, he said, was organized by taking in personnel from anti-illegal drugs units of the Philippine National Police, National Bureau of Investigation and Bureau of Customs.

"I was the one who disagreed that these people from PNP, NBI and BoC would continuously serve. We said that every year, their number should be reduced and within five years, sana, ubos na latat yon (they should all have been replaced). Their appointments were very temporary," Espino said.

Technicalities

He said most illegal drugs cases had ended up being dismissed or with the accused being acquitted because of technicalities that a law enforcer may have failed to observe.

"For example, the apprehending officer did not appear [during the hearing]. Or the manner the apprehending officers submitted the affidavit. Or illegal searches—there are really many," Espino said. "So, the ones handling these cases should be professionals who are sincere to their careers."

The biggest problem that drug enforcement is facing now is the "lure of money."

"There's big money there. This is why I kept on saying that all those involved in the anti-illegal drugs campaign must be devoted to this kind of work. Otherwise, wala talaga mang yaya diyan (nothing will happen there)," he said. With a report from Gabriel Cardinosa, Inquirer Northern Luzon

CLARK FREEPORT—SECRETARY Edgardo Pamintuan said Bases Conversion Development Authority president Narciso Abaya should give advice than merely follow the order of President Macapagal-Arroyo on where to build the interchanges of the Subic-Clark-Tarlac Expressway.

"I salute [Abaya] for being a former chief of staff [of the Armed Forces of the Philippines] but with decision-making, I'm sorry," Pamintuan, chair of the Subic-Clark Alliance for Development Council, said on Thursday.

"He's still like a military general who strictly follows orders from the commander-in-chief," he said.

ence between the number of respondents who are satisfied and dissatisfied. The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Ms Arroyo has been the least popular of the four Philippine presidents since democracy was restored in 1986, the SWS had said previously.

The latest survey was taken from Sept 2 to Sept. 5 when allegations of bribery and overpricing in the $329-million National Broadband Network project the government had awarded to China's ZTE Corp. began to hit newspaper headlines.

Ms Arroyo's husband was linked to the controversy when businessman Jose "Joey" de Venecia III, whose company was also contending for the project, claimed that Mike Arroyo tried to browbeat him into withdrawing his firm's proposal.

From neutral to negative

"Net satisfaction with the President dropped back to the negative level of the second to the fourth quarters of 2006, after being roughly neutral in first and second quarters of 2007," SWS said in a statement.

SWS noted that the average proportion trusting Mike Arroyo was only 20 percent, while the average proportion distrusting him was 51 percent since 2001.

That gave him an average net trust rating of -31 from January 2001 to September 2007.

The survey showed that Mike Arroyo was also "relatively distrusted" even by those who were satisfied with Ms Arroyo.

Nearly half (49 percent) of those who were satisfied with Ms Arroyo's performance distrusted Mike Arroyo, while 67 percent of those who were dissatisfied with her performance also distrusted him.

Although wielding no official powers, Mike Arroyo is regarded as an influential backroom operator and a vocal backer of his wife against political rivals. He has been linked to illegal gambling payoffs in the past, but has denied the charges.

SWS attributed the drop in Ms Arroyo's net satisfaction rating to "loss of support from Visayas and Mindanao, and worsening dissatisfaction in Luzon outside Metro Manila."

Net satisfaction with Ms Arroyo dropped from +10 in June (48 percent satisfied, 38 percent dissatisfied) to +1 in September (40 percent satisfied, 38

Who is Francisco?

LAWYER ERNESTO FRANCISCO LANDED in newspaper headlines in 1998 when he filed a lawsuit against toll collection on the Coastal Road.

Francisco said the Public Estates Authority and its Malaysian partner United Engineers Malaysia-Mara Philippines Corp. did not consult motorists before imposing the toll fees. PEA denied the charge. He lost the case.

Francisco was then an associate in the Accra law office, which he joined in 1990. For committing a breach of office policy for filing the lawsuit without its consent, Accra fired Francisco.

In November 2001, Francisco filed an impeachment complaint against Ombudsman Aniano Desierto. The lawyer claimed that in 1997, Desierto received from his client Luke Roxas video equipment worth more than P270,000 and P500,000 in cash in exchange for sitting on a case involving Roxas' bank.

Desierto said the complaint was part of a "well-funded demolition job" aimed at institutions involved in the plunder trial of deposed President Joseph Estrada, which he was prosecuting.

Roxas later said Francisco's allegations were all false.

In December 2001, the House committee on justice juked the impeachment complaint.

Francisco then trained his guns on Speaker Jose de Venecia, whom he accused of maneuvering the justice committee vote. He also asked the House to investigate De Venecia's alleged involvement in stopping the probe on the so-called 1997 Petron scam involving Roxas' bank.

Bank Southeast Asia was then being investigated after a syndicate was able to encash checks amounting to P539 million that Petron Corp. had issued as payment to the Bureau of Customs. Cyril L. Bonabente, Inquirer Research tion of a toll fee on the coastal road and initiated an impeachment complaint against Ombudsman Aniano Desierto in 2001. He lost both cases. (See In the Know above the story.)

Citing news reports and clippings, Francisco stressed an urgent need for the antigraft body to conduct its own investigation parallel to the ongoing Senate probe on the participation of Arroyo and Abalos, the alleged broker, in the NBN deal with China.

He said certain big personalities and high government officials, including Arroyo and Abalos, might be spared from investigation, especially with the suspension of the NBN deal ordered by Ms Arroyo.

Francisco also cited Executive Order No. 317 stipulating the code of conduct for relatives, close personal relations of the President, Vice President and members of the Cabinet.

Under the executive order, relatives of these high-ranking government officials are prohibited from directly or indirectly engaging in transactions with the government, exerting undue influence on the outcome of public bidding and government contracts, having financial or pecuniary interest in any business, contract or transaction with the government, among others.

Violation of these provisions will subject the offender to criminal liabilities and will render null and void all agreements, contracts, and any other transaction entered into with the government.

Disgusted and sickened

"Like most citizens, I work very hard to earn an honest living. Thus, I am very disgusted and sickened by the unfolding of recent events relative to the [broadband] deal," Francisco said.

"The suspension does not absolve any one of liability if it is finally determined that there were irregularities committed. On the other hand, if at all, the ordered suspension of the deal by [Ms Arroyo] is strongly indicative of the possibility that the deal was in fact attended by irregularities," he stated.

This Act is paid for by the Provincial Government of Misamis Occidental exclusively to the Provincial Governor of Misamis Occidental.

Razon named national police chief

By Alcuin Papa

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO yesterday announced the appointment of Deputy Director General Avelino Razon as the next chief of the 125,000-strong Philippine National Police.

Razon, currently PNP administration head, will replace Director General Oscar Calderon when the latter retires on Oct. 1 upon reaching the age of 56.

Ms Arroyo made the announcement during a business forum in Iligan City.

A graduate of the Philippine Military Academy Class '74, Razon made a name tracking down international terrorists and securing presidents and dignitaries.

Razon, 54, was formerly deputy group commander for special operations of the Presidential Security Group and commander of PNP Region 7. In 1996, he was appointed chief of the Western Police District.

During the 1996 Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation summit in Subic, then President Fidel Ramos tapped Razon to head the critical security operations. He also took charge of securing the heads of state who attended the Association of South East Asian Nations summit in Cebu early this year.

Razon's qualifications include expertise in Ranger operations, intelligence, underwater search and rescue, airborne operations, counterrevolutionary warfare, and drug law enforcement.

He is a sharpshooter, consistently topping shooting competitions, and an avid motorcycle rider. During his stint at the WPD, he started the "bike patrols" in Manila.

In an interview with the INQUIRER, Razon thanked President Arroyo "for her trust and confidence."

The appointment is a birthday gift for Razon, who turns 55 on Thursday.

"We promise to do good for the citizenry. This is a challenge to step up our service to the public," he said.

He said his first order to the PNP would be to "continue the programs" of his predecessors. "There should be sustainability of the programs of bringing the police closer to the community."

Calderon said he believed Razon was "competent to lead the organization. I am happy for him. He has the support of the officers of the PNP."

Razon was also reportedly the choice of prominent Chinese businessmen and civic organizations

Isafp chief during time of 'Garci' tapes retires

By Nikko Dizon

THE MILITARY NO LONGER HAS JURISDICTION over Vice Admiral Tirso Danga—who has been summoned to appear in the Senate investigation of the "Hello Garci" wiretapping controversy—following his retirement yesterday from the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

"We lose military custody over him with his retirement," Lt. Col. Bartolome Bacarro, AFP spokesperson, said.

Danga was among the government and military officials prevented by Executive Order No. 464 and Memorandum Circular 108 issued by Macacafang from testifying in congressional hearings.

He was chief of the Intelligence Service of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (Isafp) at the time its agents were allegedly wiretapping the conversations of certain government officials around the time of the 2004 presidential elections.

In a surprising twist, the wiretaps caught several mobile phone conversations between President Macapagal-Arroyo and former Election Commissioner Virgilio Garci on the vote count in the polls.

The President denied committing electoral fraud and she apologized for making the improper calls. The issue, however, has refused to die since 2005 when it was brought to light, and the Senate has reopened the Hello Garci probe.

Bacarro said he was not sure if Isafp had rules that prevent retired intelligence officers from divulging information about the unit's operations.

Danga turned 56 yesterday, the mandatory retirement age in the military. His last post was as chief of the Western Command in Palawan, which he relinquished in June.

Defense reporters lose computers

BURGLARS BROKE INTO THE PRESS OFFICE at Camp Aguinaldo in Quezon City yesterday and stole three central processing units (CPUs), raising questions on the security at the sprawling headquarters of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, as well as speculations of media harassment.

In a statement, the Defense Press Corps, comprised of some 40 print and broadcast journalists covering the military and defense beats, condemned the break in.

Remote reporter Verlin Ruiz, the outgoing press corps president, said that while the authorities were investigating the incident and the newsmen did not want to speculate on motives, "it cannot be discounted that some of us would think that this is some form of harassment."

It also could have been an inside job, the group acknowledged.

The three CPUs were part of the computers used by Ruiz, Victor Reyes of Maaya, Anthony Vargas of The Manila Times and Dennis Carcamo of Manila Standard Today to file their stories.

They were the newest of the seven computers at the press office.

The burglars, however, did not take with them a brand new television set, cable converter and other items in the office.

Ruiz and Joy Cantos of Pilipino Star Ngayon discovered the burglary at around 10 a.m. yesterday.

Ruiz said this was the first time the press office, consisting of two rooms, a toilet and kitchen, had been broken into. It is located beside the AFP Public Information Office behind the grandstand.

"We also have questions about the break-in... we are appealing to everyone to make themselves available for investigation," said Lt. Col. Bartolome Bacarro, AFP spokesperson.

Ex-vice mayor found guilty of indirect contempt

Jail term 'very harsh'—Brillante

By Jocelyn R. Uy

THE SANDIGANBAYAN YESTERDAY convicted former Makati Vice Mayor Roberto Brillante of indirect contempt after he accused three of its justices of accepting P10 million in bribe money from Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay in exchange for dismissing a case he was facing last year.

The antigraft court's Third Division sentenced Brillante to six months imprisonment and ordered him to pay a P30,000 fine. However, he was freed on bail after he posted a bond of P10,000 later in the day.

The conviction stemmed from Brillante's statements at a press conference in November last year alleging that Justices Godofredo Legaspi, Efren de la Cruz and Norberto Geraldez did not study the documents supporting the graft charge against Binay.

Instead, he claimed that the three occupied themselves with counting the money they received from the mayor. Brillante held the press conference after the court junked the graft complaint he had filed against Binay in 2003 over the mayor's alleged purchase of overpriced furniture and fittings for the new Makati City Hall between 1999 and 2001.

The three justices later ordered Brillante to explain why he should not be cited for indirect contempt.

Brillante justified his statements by hiding under the mantle of freedom of speech and expression ... the making of contemporaneous statements directed against the court was not an exercise of free speech; rather, it was an abuse of such right," said the court decision penned by Legaspi.

Brillante, meanwhile, said the six-month jail term was "very harsh" but only to be expected from the justices who, he said, acted as "judge, jury and executioner."

"I was expecting to be reprimanded by the court, and to be given the usual 30-day prison term and the maximum fine of P30,000," he said. "But six months is too harsh for an indirect contempt charge," he added.

Brillante said that he would file an appeal in the Supreme Court. With DJ Yap

Edsa traffic lighter by weekend

By DJ Yap

THE LAYING OF drainage pipes to reduce or eliminate flooding on Edsa is taking longer than anticipated, prompting the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) to advise the public to take alternate routes to avoid traffic jams.

The agency has promised to work double time on the flood control project, which has led to heavy traffic on the thoroughfare for the past several days. It hopes to complete the pipelaying by Friday.

Alternate routes

Instead of taking Edsa-Main Avenue, motorists may use roads leading to C-5, Hemady, Mother Ignacia Avenue and the route leading to the Makati-Mandaluyong Bridge, said Angelito Vergel de Dos, MMDA Traffic Operations Center chief.

MMDA Flood Control and Sewerage Management Office Director Baltazar Melgar asked the public for more patience, noting that the MMDA closed only two lanes on Edsa, leaving four open to motorists.

"Traffic flow is relatively smooth from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., but the situation worsens during rush hour," he said.

The MMDA is installing 48-inch cross pipes from Main Avenue crossing Edsa toward a nearby creek to divert floodwaters from the highway.

GMA administration more corrupt than Erap's?

PRESIDENT GLORIA WILL grant with alacrity convicted former President Erap's request that he be given absolute pardon without him admitting guilt.

Her advisers have apparently told her that if she grants pardon to Erap, her successor might also look kindly on her should she be convicted of the same offense of plunder in the future.

Plunder cases and cases involving the disappearances and murders of political activists and journalists await GMA after she steps down in 2010.

What goes around comes around. That's the law of karma.

What she has done to Erap will surely be done to her.

If businessman Jose "Joey" de Venecia III, son and namesake of the Speaker, is telling the truth on the $329-million National Broadband Network (NBN) project, then what Erap allegedly stole from the country is peanuts compared to this administration's reported corruption.

The Chinese firm ZTE Corp. has allegedly advanced $50 million to some government bigwigs and influential people for the approval of the NBN contract.

Multipled at the current exchange rate of P46 to the US dollar, that's P2.3 billion in cold cash! Add to the P2.3 billion the other amounts allegedly earned by the grafters in other controversial billion-peso projects like the fertilizer scam and the Diosdado Macapagal Highway construction overprice, and you have mind-boggling figures.

Now that the controversial project has been suspended by both the Supreme Court and the President herself, the problem facing the ZTE Corp., the alleged briber, is how to get back the money it has advanced.

Of course, the money must already have been spent by the bribe recipients. One report says one of the recipients already bought a P200-million mansion in an exclusive village.

And who knows, part of the bribe money might have already been deposited in some European banks.

Had those guys been dealing with the Mafia, they would now be dead.

The Philippine National Police (PNP) high command says stations and precincts will be cleaned or repaired to make them look presentable to the public, and thus build trust and confidence in the police.

But however clean and spruced up a precinct or station is, if its occupants are grouchy and discourteous to complainants, the bad image of the police will not improve.

There's an old Filipino saying that no matter how old and rundown a house is, if its occupants are human and humane beings, then the house is still a home.

Most citizens avoid going to a police station or precinct because they find the place full of cops who think they're masters instead of public servants.

For example, instead of getting sympathy from a desk officer at the station, a complainant is either ignored or shouted at.

Worse, some police investigators demand money for gasoline or bond paper from an aggrieved citizen so his complaint may be attended to.

There are instances when a citizen calls a police station or precinct because there is trouble in his neighborhood, only to be told that there is no vehicle for responding cops so they can go to the troubled spot.

QC housewife loses P1.7M; suspect in rob nabbed by cops

By Kenneth M. del Rosario

A HOUSEMAID WAS ARRESTED last week by the police after her employer lost more than P1.7 million in cash and jewelry.

Evelyn de Guia-Magboo, 48, a resident of Victorian Heights, Novaliches, Quezon City, called up the police at 5 p.m. Friday to report that her helper, Preciosa Cajara, 40, had made off with P1.2 million in cash and over P500,000 worth of jewelry.

Magboo told authorities that she was at work when she received a call from her son who told her that he could not enter their house because it was locked.

Cajara, her son added, was nowhere to be found.

One of Magboo's sons later came home and the brothers decided to enter the house through a window, police said.

Inside the house, the two discovered that the door leading to the master bedroom was open and that the safety vault where their mother kept her valuables had been emptied of its contents.

Beside the vault, they found a hammer, a kitchen knife and a screw driver which police believe were used by the suspect to open the vault.

SPO1 Ronaldo Murado and SPO1 Leopoldo Macarage of the Quezon City Police District station 4 were conducting an investigation that same night when Cajara was spotted in the subdivision. She was immediately arrested.

A tricycle driver later told the police that he had taken the suspect, who had with her a box which she said contained an air conditioner, to a small near the area. The suspect then got off his tricycle with the box and boarded a taxi.

Exhumed body of girl subjected to new tests

By Allison W. Lopez

FORENSIC EXPERTS YESTERDAY exhumed the body of the young girl—believed to be that of Geraldine Palma—found inside a suitcase in Tondo last month and subjected it to a battery of tests to confirm the victim's identity.

The forensic experts were led by Dr. Renato Bautista of the National Bureau of Investigation medico-legal division. They were accompanied by members of the bureau's Special Task Force and the Manila Police District's homicide division.

The MPD and NBI are conducting parallel investigations of the rape and killing of Palma, a 7-year-old student who disappeared with her nanny, Marites Ontog, last August.

The body recovered was believed to be Palma's until Manila police raised doubts about the girl's identity after Palma's records showed she was several inches shorter than the girl in the suitcase.

Palma's parents, Gerald and Felina, were present when personnel of the Funeraria Paz dug up the girl's coffin at the Manila Memorial Park in Sucat, Parañaque City, at 1:30 p.m.

A priest blessed the coffin before it was brought to a chapel inside the memorial park where forensic experts conducted an "exhaustive re-autopsy" that included an X-ray, fingerprinting, dental examination and DNA testing.

"Of course, I'm sad because my daughter's body was disturbed but I hope it would all be worth the trouble," said Gerald Palma, whose DNA sample was taken last Wednesday.

NBI-STF head agent Arnel Dalumpines said the results of the DNA exam would be out after a month.

He added that they were still looking for Ontog, whom they consider as the key to the Palma case.

THE BODY believed to be that of 7-year-old Geraldine Palma was exhumed yesterday at the Manila Memorial Park in Parañaque City to settle the question of the girl's identity.

Cris Mendez's ma gets offer to settle case

By Jeannette I. Andrade

THE MOTHER OF SUSPECTED hazing victim, University of the Philippines student Cris Anthony Mendez, has been approached by an unidentified man who advised her to agree to an out-of-court settlement.

Two sources close to the Mendez family told the INQUIRER that Cristina, the victim's mother, was recently confined in a hospital in Quezon province when her blood pressure shot up after she was approached by the stranger.

According to the sources, who spoke independently to the INQUIRER on condition of anonymity, the man who said he was a University of the Philippines alumnus, reportedly told Cristina to agree to a settlement because even if she were to take the case to court, it would take some time before it could be resolved.

The man added that there was also a strong possibility that she would not end up getting justice for her son's death.

Her confinement in the hospital prevented Cristina from attending a Mass celebrated yesterday by Fr. Robert Reyes at the UP National College of Public Administration and Governance. The victim was the college representative to the UP

Student Council in Diliman. But in her message to those who attended the event, Cristina said in Filipino: "I am praying and I am still searching for justice. Many tell me that this is hard to achieve because those responsible for my son's death are intelligent, rich and influential."

Faith

She added: "Often my faith falters, and I am only filled with hope each time I am with you who continue to pray that those responsible for my son's death would be brought to justice. I hope that you will not stop, like me and Renz (her younger son) and that you will not forget."

"It is almost one month after his death, but the sadness and loneliness I feel for him has not been lessened. I still do not understand why he had to die that way and thus early," she said.

Reyes and other UP officials later unveiled a painting done by former UP Visayas fraternity leader Joel Ferraris, titled "The Wrong Sacrifice."

Reyes said that the artwork was "the artist's way of expressing his profound indignation and rejection of fraternity violence and his appeal to fraternities to see the blindness, arrogance and vanity that have repeatedly led to senseless and wasteful deaths."

Prisoners stage riot

PRISONERS at the Bureau of Immigration detention facility in Camp Bagong Diwa, Taguig City, yesterday threw rocks and bottles, after an inmate, a Vietnamese man, was found dead in an isolation cell yesterday. The naked body of Teh Min Lee Dien was found at 10:45 a.m. but it did not have any injury or bruises.

Chief Insp. Celso Rodriguez, chief of the Taguig City police Investigation division, said the victim was kept in isolation for misconduct and that he was held at the detention facility for not having valid immigration papers. Dien was last seen alive by a catering helper, Loretta Abacai, at 7 a.m.

yesterday who said that the victim even asked her for his usual supply of cigarettes. Some of the facility's glass windows were destroyed during yesterday's riot which was quelled by policemen from the Regional Special Action Unit. The victim's body was taken to the Veronica Funeral Homes for autopsy.

Spare Calauit animals, Lim asked

By Jerome Aning

THE ANIMAL WELFARE GROUP People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (Peta) has asked Manila Mayor Alfredo Lim not to push through with his plan to get more animals from Calauit Island in Palawan province to replenish the dwindling number at the city zoo.

Peta Asia-Pacific director Jason Baker said the city government should instead find ways to improve the welfare of the animals or close down the Manila Zoo and set its residents free in wildlife reservations.

"Given the problems with the zoo's aging infrastructure, it would be extremely cruel to subject even more animals to such miserable conditions," Baker said in his Sept. 21 letter to Lim, a copy of which was provided by Peta to the INQUIRER.

Lim earlier rejected calls from the group to close down the zoo, saying he even plans to add more animals. "We've already asked officials in Calauit Island if they can spare us some of their animals there," he said, adding that his office would take care of freight costs.

Animals at the zoo are housed in cramped cages, according to Baker. In the summer, they cope with the sweltering heat with little relief.

"Even animals who have been caged since birth feel the instinctive need to move around freely, stretch their limbs or wings and exercise," he said, adding that studies have shown that confined animals suffer from boredom, some so severely that it can lead to self-mutilation or other self-destructive behavior.

The animal rights advocate said he would like to give Lim a personal tour around the zoo "to point out all the suffering that takes place constantly there."

Boy with hole in his heart needs help

BRYAN TABAGO'S HEALTH PROBLEMS began when he was born.

The 3-year-old son of Meriam Tabago of Pearl Island Compound, Malinis Street, Lawang Bato, Valenzuela City, has a congenital heart disease.

Bryan has been an outpatient at the Philippine Heart Center in East Avenue, Quezon City, for almost three years now.

There is a hole in his heart which was discovered when he was only two months old. Meriam said in her letter to the INQUIRER.

According to the housewife, whose husband works a delivery man, Bryan needs to be operated on right away because his condition has already affected his heart and this might lead to bigger expenses.

The only problem is that the family does not have the P60,000 to P100,000 for the operation needed to repair the damage in the young boy's heart.

"I am appealing to Inquirer readers for financial assistance as well as prayers for a successful operation," Meriam said in Filipino.

Kindhearted individuals can deposit their donations in any Metrobank branch (account number 3165962649, account name Meriam Tabago). They may also call her at 4445420 or 0910-3115088. Santiago R. Alcantara

SHEIKH Muszaphar Shukor, Malaysia's soon-to-be first astronaut, walks near St. Basil's Cathedral on Red Square in Moscow, on Sept. 20. AFP

Muslim astronaut needn't fast in space during Ramadan, says minister

PUTRAJAYA, MALAYSIA—Malaysia's first astronaut will not be required to fast while in space even though he is a Muslim and the flight will be during Ramadan, a government minister said Monday.

"When you travel there is no compulsion to fast," Science Minister Jamaluddin Jarjis told reporters.

Sheikh Muszaphar Shukor, 35, is one of three people who will lift off in a Russian space craft on Oct. 10 for a 10-day mission in the International Space Station. He has said that as a good Muslim he hopes to fast in space even though his main priority is to conduct scientific experiments.

But Jamaluddin said Sheikh Muszaphar, who has been fasting during training along with his backup Rizq Khalid, can postpone the fasting until after he returns.

The fasting month of Ramadan started on Sept. 13 and is expected to end on Oct. 12, which means Sheikh Muszaphar will have to fast for only two or three days if he insists on not eating from dawn to dusk, an Islamic religious requirement.

Jamaluddin also said he expects Sheikh Muszaphar to pray only three times a day instead of the obligatory five to reduce the inconvenience of going through prayer rituals in the gravity-free atmosphere.

Observant Muslims are required to turn toward Mecca in Saudi Arabia, and pray five times a day while kneeling. However, that becomes difficult in zero gravity while the space station is circling the Earth 16 times a day.

Malaysia's National Fatwa Council has ruled that the astronaut will not be required to kneel to pray if the absence of gravity makes it too hard, nor will he have to wash hands and face with water as required—a simple wet towel will do.

Jamaluddin said Malaysia is hoping to send a second astronaut into space, depending on public support for the first mission. He said the second mission would cost $30 million, but the long-term benefits would be worth it.

"If there is good strong public support we should continue the mission to sustain the awareness. We should look not only on short-term return but also medium to long term."

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Abdullah Ahmad Badawi wished Sheikh Muszaphar success.

Sheikh Muszaphar will return to earth on Oct. 20 along with two members of the station's crew, cosmonauts Pyotr Yurchikhin and Oleg Kotov. AP

US snipers 'bait' Iraqis—Post

Shooters scatter fancy items, kill those who pick them up

WASHINGTON—AT THE URGING of Pentagon experts in special operations, US military snipers operating in Iraq are "baiting" Iraqis by scattering items like detonation cord, plastic explosives and ammunition and then ambushing and killing those who pick them up, The Washington Post reported Monday.

The newspaper said the classified program was described in investigative documents related to recently filed murder charges against three snipers who are accused of planting evidence on Iraqis they killed.

"Baiting is putting an object out there that we know they will use, with the intention of destroying the enemy," Captain Matthew Didier, the leader of an elite sniper scout platoon is quoted as saying in a sworn statement.

"Basically, we would put an item out there and watch it," Didier continued. "If someone found the item, picked it up and attempted to leave with the item, we would engage the individual as I saw this as a sign they would use the item against US forces."

In documents obtained by The Post from family members of the accused soldiers, Didier said members of the Pentagon's Asymmetric Warfare Group visited his unit in January and later passed along ammunition boxes filled with the "drop items" to be used to disrupt "attempts at harming Coalition Forces and give us the upper hand in a fight."

Eugene Fidell, president of the National Institute of Military Justice, said such a baiting program should be examined "quite meticulously" because it raises troubling possibilities, such as what happens when civilians pick up the items, the paper said.

"In a country that is awash in armaments and magazines and implements of war, if every time somebody picked up something that was potentially useful as a weapon, you might as well ask every Iraqi to walk around with a target on his back," Fidell is quoted in the article as saying.

Soldiers said that about a dozen platoon members were aware of the program, and that numerous others knew about the "drop items" but did not know their purpose, The Post reported.

Two soldiers, who had not been officially informed about the program, came forward with allegations of wrongdoing after they learned they were going to be punished for falling asleep on a sniper mission, the paper said.

Army officials declined to discuss the classified program, according to the report. AFP

Military operation frees 2 Italian soldiers kidnapped in Afghanistan

HERAT, AFGHANISTAN—NATO FORCES freed two kidnapped Italian soldiers in a military operation in western Afghanistan in which both men were wounded, Italian and Afghan officials said Monday.

The two men, soldiers with the Nato-led International Security Assistance Force, had gone missing in the western province of Herat on Saturday with their Afghan interpreter and driver.

"There was an Isaf operation and they were rescued. Both of them are injured," the Italian embassy in Kabul said. It was not clear who had abducted them, a diplomat said on condition of anonymity.

At least five of the abductors were killed in the raid to free the men, Italy's Ansa news agency reported.

Italian soldiers led the Nato operation to free them, supported by British troops, Italian Defence Minister Arturo Parisi said on Rai public television.

The Isaf media office in Kabul could not immediately confirm any operation.

The Italian defense ministry in Rome was quoted by Ansa as saying that one of the two soldiers was in serious condition. Both men were being treated in a Nato hospital, it said.

Afghan officials also confirmed the men were freed in an Isaf rescue operation but had no details.

Intelligence reports indicated the men were captured by a local Taliban commander near Herat's Shindand district, the police chief of criminal investigations for western Afghanistan, Ali Khan Husseinzada, said.

However the main Taliban spokesperson, Yousuf Ahmad, said he knew nothing about the men. The militia, waging an antigovernment insurgency, has been behind several abductions including of 23 South Koreans in July.

"According to our intelligence information, a Taliban commander, Mullah Abdul Hamid, had taken them and had moved them to an area between Farah (province) and Shindand," Husseinzada said.

The men had been out of contact since they visited the volatile district on Saturday. AFP

Japan PM-designate Fukuda picks lieutenants

TOKYO—JAPAN'S PRIME MINISTER-to-be Yasuo Fukuda selected his party lieutenants on Monday as he braced for a showdown with a combative opposition and calls for early elections after a disastrous year for the ruling coalition.

The 71-year-old Fukuda, a moderate who favors warmer ties with Asia, was voted leader of the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) on Sunday after the abrupt resignation of his predecessor, Shinzo Abe, whose administration was crippled by scandals and gaffes.

Fukuda will automatically become prime minister on Tuesday thanks to the LDP's huge majority in parliament's lower house.

However, the opposition Democratic Party and its allies hold sway in the upper house, an unusual situation that is likely to beset Fukuda's administration with policy struggles.

The thorniest issue may be Japan's naval support for US-led military operations in Afghanistan, which the LDP wants to continue beyond a Nov. 1 mandate expiry in the face of opposition from the muscle-flexing Democratic Party.

Fukuda, who bears the hawkish Taro Aso to the top job, picked conservative former education minister Ibuiki Bunmei, a faction leader and loyal ally in the leadership election, for the No. 2 position in his party, replacing Aso.

Allies Sadakazu Tanigaki, a dovish former finance minister, but also a faction leader, and Toshihiro Nikai were named for the other top party posts. Another Fukuda backer, Makoto Koga, was put in charge of election strategy.

Fukuda denied that the appointments had been made on the basis of factional deals, the LDP's traditional way of operating. "I chose the best people for the positions," he told reporters.

Analysts say the party would have difficulty restoring public trust if Fukuda was seen to be appointing cronies or factional candidates to key cabinet and party positions.

Tanigaki has advocated raising the consumption tax to help tame Japan's huge public debt, and his appointment is a sign that the issue will be at the center of the new government's policy.

Some analysts have expressed concern that efforts to help those who have lost out economically in restructuring of the past few years could result in making the government debt bigger. Reuters

Young Israelis dodge the draft, some in protest

By Elana Ringer and Rebecca Harrison

JERUSALEM—TO MANY SHE IS A traitor, a coward and a parasite. But 17-year-old Israeli "draft dodger" Saar Vardi says if more people thought like her, the Middle East would be a more peaceful place.

Vardi is part of a growing group of young Israelis who are refusing to sign up for mandatory military service, often to protest over the Jewish state's occupation of Palestinian territory or because of last year's unpopular war in Lebanon.

Army statistics show the number of young people who do not enlist for military service has crept up in recent years to more than one in four men in 2007 and more than 43 percent of women.

"People refer to me as a traitor and say that my country has given me so much and I'm not willing to give anything back, like a parasite," Vardi, a student, said.

"But I know what I believe ... If truly everyone saw things the way I see them, then we wouldn't need an army."

Most Israeli men have to serve for three years in the army and are liable for reserve duty after that unless they can prove they are physically or psychologically unfit for battle, or come from an ultra-Orthodox background. Women must do 21 months.

Until recently, opting out of military service was largely taboo in a nation born out of war and in constant conflict with its Arab neighbors. Groups of young soldiers clutching rifles are a common sight on the streets of Israel and for many, serving in the army goes to the core of national identity.

The trend to avoid the draft—which has been joined by some entertainers—has sparked heated media debate and government pledges to act.

"When he goes into battle a soldier should not have to feel that a portion of our society regards him as a sucker," Defense Minister Ehud Barak was reported as saying in July.

Ultra Orthodox Jews have been exempt from military service for years, and their ranks are growing. But more secular Israelis are also finding ways around joining up, sometimes by saying they are conscientious objectors or unfit.

Some say they are loath to fight for an occupying force and are willing to go to jail for their beliefs.

Others say they do not trust Ehud Olmert's government with their lives after a report said the prime minister acted impulsively in going to war against Lebanon last year.

And some young Israelis would simply rather focus on their education or career than on defending their country.

"There's the ongoing wars and the ongoing occupation," said Hagay Matar, who spent two years in prison for refusing the draft. "People are starting to feel they don't have to do it."

But several mayors have vowed not to allow entertainers who did not enlist to take part in Israel's 60th anniversary celebrations next year, and one suggested denying them jobs in municipal government.

Some commentators have lambasted those who shun military service, reminding them they face jail.

But those who resist military service have also found support. Columnist Yonatan Gefen asked in the Ma'ariv newspaper why Israel's youth would want to fight in an army "that doesn't know what it is dying for." Reuters

Indonesia seeks $1.4B from Suharto

JAKARTA—THE INDONESIAN government sought Monday for ex-dictator Suharto and a charity he chaired while in power to hand over $1.4 billion in stolen assets and damages in a civil suit against them.

State prosecutor Dachmer Munthe, reading an indictment at the opening hearing, said that Suharto and the Supersemar Scholarship Foundation misused $440 million.

"The first and second defendants (Suharto and the foundation) utilized funds that were gathered... against the aims of the foundation," he said.

Munthe said the government was also seeking additional damages of 10 trillion rupiah ($1 billion).

The prosecutor alleged that the foundation had distributed funds meant to go to needy students to private companies from 1982 to 1993.

"If that money can be recovered, there will be more than a thousand people who could obtain scholarships," Munthe added.

The recipients included an airline owned by Suharto's youngest son that went bankrupt, an ailing bank in which the foundation had stakes and paper and pulp companies linked to a close Suharto crony, Muhammad "Bob" Hasan.

At the trial, a group repre-

senting former and current recipients of scholarships from the foundation presented a demand to be involved in the lawsuit as plaintiffs, apparently fearing they could be asked to return the funds they received.

Judge Wahyono, who is heading the panel of judges hearing the case, accepted the intervention and said a decision would later be made as to the position of the group in the suit.

The civil suit represents apparently revived efforts by the government of President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono to bring Suharto to justice, although analysts have been doubtful that the case—resting on evidence decades old—will succeed.

A long-running criminal case against Suharto was abandoned in May last year on health grounds, triggering widespread criticism of Yudhoyono.

In a surprise ruling earlier this month, the Supreme Court awarded Suharto about $106 million in damages in a libel case against US-based Time magazine, which alleged in a 1999 article that the ex-president and his family had stolen up to $73 billion.

The aging Suharto stepped down amid violent protests in 1998 after a 32-year rule.

A successful case against him would be seen as a symbolic step to improving Indonesia's dismal corruption record. AFP

100,000 demonstrate against Burma generals

RANGOON, BURMA—AS MANY AS 100,000 antigovernment protesters led by a phalanx of Buddhist monks marched Monday through Rangoon (Yangon), the largest crowd to demonstrate in Burma's biggest city since a 1988 prodemocracy uprising that was brutally crushed by the military.

Some participants claimed there were several hundred thousand marchers in their ranks, but an international aid agency official with employees monitoring the crowd estimated said the size was well over 50,000 and approaching 100,000. From the front of the march, witnesses could see a one-mile stretch of eight-lane road was filled with people.

The march, launched from the Shwedagon pagoda, the country's most sacred shrine, gathered participants as it wended its way through Rangoon's streets under cloudy skies. Some 20,000 monks took the lead, with onlookers joining in on what had been billed as a day of general protest.

The march covered at least 10 km in its first few hours, passing by the old campus of Rangoon University, a hotbed of protest in past times. Students were seen joining Monday's march. The current protests began on Aug. 19 as a movement against economic hardship, after the government sharply raised fuel prices. But it has its basis in long-standing dissatisfaction with the repressive MANDAUE CITY—SUSANO MEGARANTO OF INDONESIA BLEW AN EARLY positional advantage with the white pieces but still managed a draw with fellow grandmaster G.N. Gopal of India in 55 moves of the Sicilian to keep the solo lead in the sixth Asian Individual Chess Championship at the Cebu International Convention Center.

It was the second draw in as many days for the 20-year-old Indonesian GM after racking up four straight wins, including two against Filipino foes.

But it was enough to give Megaranto, one of two Indonesians in the tournament, the solo lead with five points in the tough, 11-round tournament.

But the day also belonged to Asia's first GM Eugene Torre, who made his presence felt as he overpowered No. 43 GM Alexey Kim of South Korea in 49 moves of the Four Knights' Opening.

The 56-year-old Filipino chess icon, who defeated FM Sam. Khader of Jordan in the previous round, also boosted his chances for one of 10 slots to the World Chess Cup in Russia with four points on three wins, two draws and only one loss.

GM-candidate Wesley So also had a good day, holding sixth seed GM Utut Adianto of Indonesia to a draw in 51 moves of the Bishop's opening.

So, who will represent the country in the World Junior Chess Championships in Armenia next month, and Adianto both had a rook, a knight and five pawns at endgame.

The biggest casualty for the 19-year-old Fil. pino delegation was IM Darwin Laylo, who absorbed his second loss.

Laylo, who held the distinction as one of the two highest-placed Filipinos after five rounds, fell to GM Negi Parimarjan (Elo 2529) of India.

GM Mark Paragua settled for a draw with upset-conscious Cebu sensation IM Steven Yap to join So and Laylo in a big group with 3.5 points.

Megaranto labored for nearly five hours before settling for a draw with fellow GM Zhao Jun of China to stay at the helm after five rounds.

Megaranto, the 20-year-old Indonesian champion who swept his first four matches, tried hard but failed to find a win against the tough-defending Chinese campaigner in their explosive Queen and pawn ending.

Seven other matches in the first 10 boards, including those of GM Rogelio Antonio Jr against IM Enamul Hossain of Bangladesh and IM Darwin Laylo against GM Zhou Jianchao of China, ended in quick and lackluster draws as most of the players kept their positions going into the sixth round Monday.

Gopal made the biggest gain as he edged Li Chao of China to join second seed GM Zhang Pengxiang of China and Zhao Jun in a three-way tie for second to fourth places with four points.

Zhang, who topped the first Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo Cup tournament at the Duty Free Fiesta Mall in Parañaque City last year, halved the point with fellow Chinese GM Wang Hao.

Antonio, Laylo and nine other foreign players also stayed within striking distance with 3.5 points.

Cebu sensation IM Steven Yap also resumed his giant killing run, beating IM Wang Rui of China this time to move up to a heavy, 18-man logjam with three points.

But luck, however, deserted IMs Oliver Dimakiling, Richard Bitton and Barlo Nadera, NM Efren Bagamash and Voltaire Sevillano.

Tierro, Arcilla complete Davis Cup rout

KUWAIT CITY—PATRICK JOHN TIERRO and Johnny Arcilla overpowered separate rivals Sunday to complete a swash-buckling Filipino sweep of host Kuwait in the Asia-Oceania Zone Group II Davis Cup finals here.

Tierro thumped Kuwait No. 1 Abi Ghareeb, 6-3, 6-1, while Arcilla came back from a 1-4 deficit in the second set to beat Ahmad Rabeeah Muhammad, 6-1, 7-5, in the reverse singles of the best-of-five tie to formalize the Philippines' entry into Group I of the zone next year.

The Philippines clinched the tie on Saturday when an ailing Cecil Mamut and Eric Tamo bested Mohammad Al-

TIERRO ARCILLA

Ghareeb and Mohammad Siddiq, 6-7 (5), 6-0, 6-2, 2-6, 6-1, in the deciding doubles match.

Mamut, who was rushed to a hospital

Friday evening after contracting an allergy, started the Philippine juggernaut with a 6-3, 6-0, 6-0 rout of Muhammad in Friday's opening singles.

Tano then made it 2-0 by humbling Al-Ghareeb, 6-2, 5-3, 7-5.

The win sent the Philippines back to Group I, where it played last in 1997, in the company of Australia, Japan, Thailand, India, Kazakhstan and Taiwan.

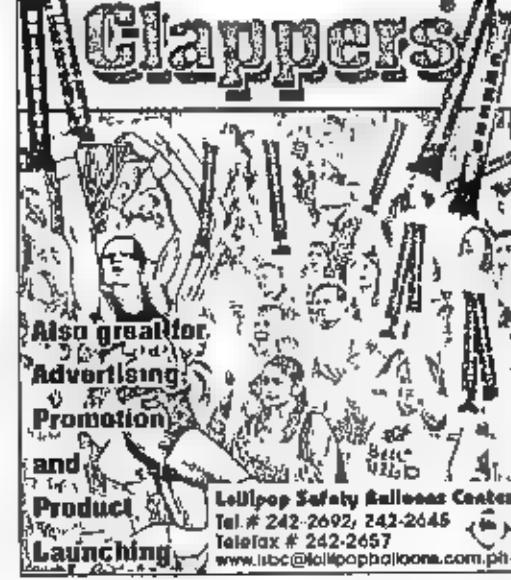

"We must get ready for Group I early," the 31-year-old Mamut said. "This will be the real competition."

Mamut also said that his allergy has "gone away" and he is sure it was not caused by the "tinolang manok" (chick en ginger stew) provided for the team, on Mamut's request, by members of the Filipino Tennis Association in Kuwait.

"I hope that in our future campaigns in other countries, the Filipinos there will give the same support the Filipinos here gave us," he said.

"Phase three of our program is now complete but this will not be the end," non-playing captain Martin Misa said, adding that the team will now turn its attention to the country's campaign in the coming Southeast Asian Games where the Nationals will defend their men's team title and Mamut his singles and doubles crowns with Tano.

Filipino dragon paddlers bag gold

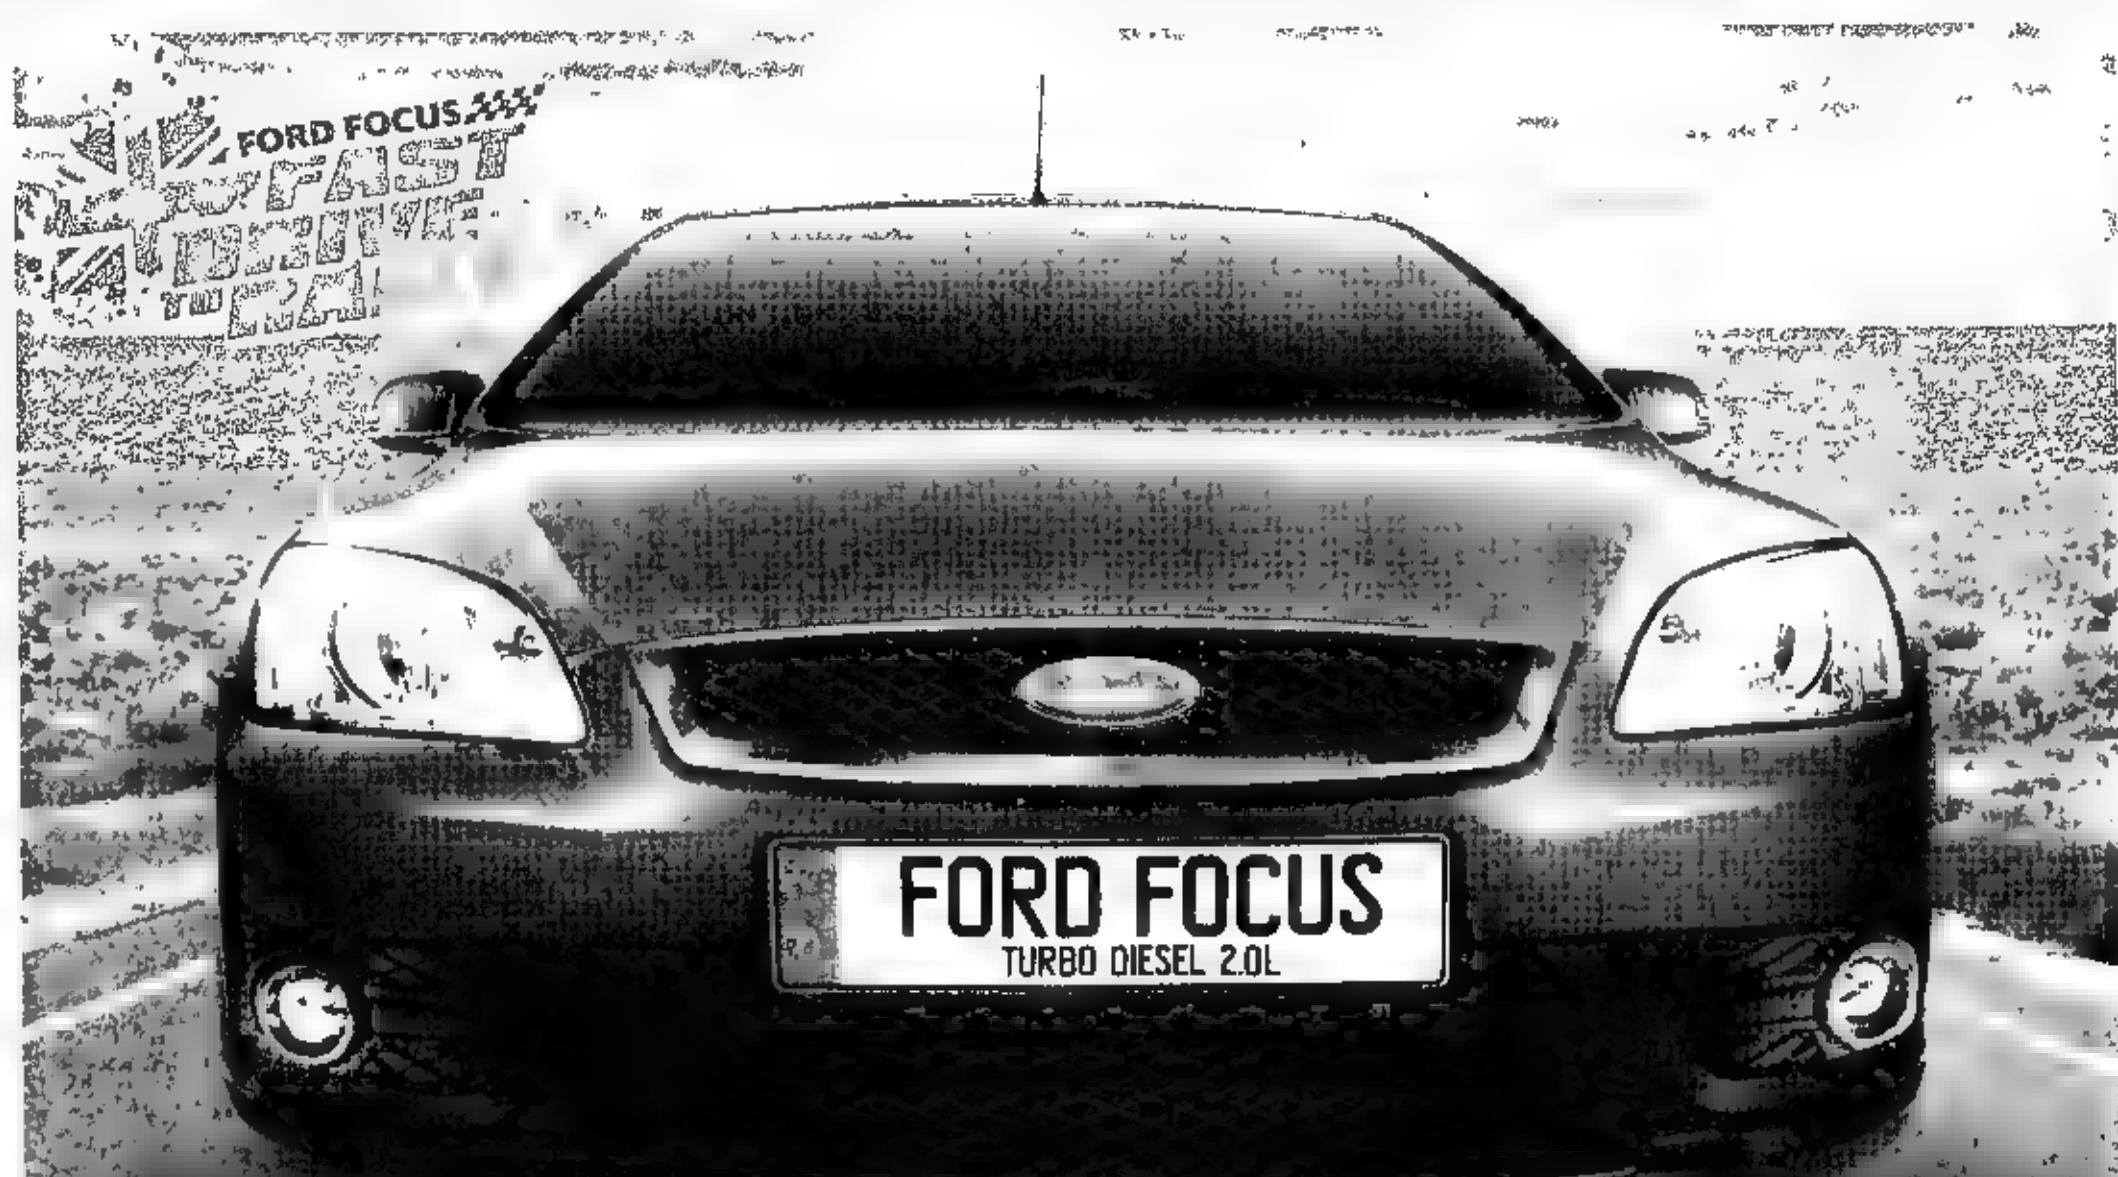

THE PHILIPPINE men's team bagged a gold medal and finished in the top three in three other events in the 8th IDBF World Dragon Boat Racing Championships which ended last weekend at the Sydney International Regatta Course.

The Philippines bested teams from Canada, the United States, Australia, Germany, Britain, Chile, Macau, Slovenia, and China in the Premier Open 200-meter race.

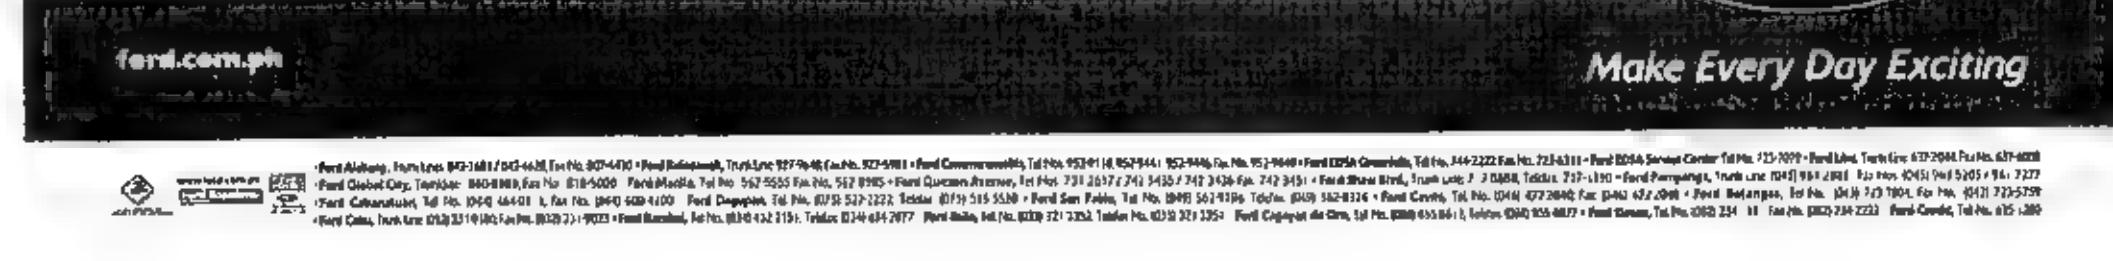

The Filipinos settled for silver in the Premier Open 500m event and bronze medals in the 1000m and 2000m races.

Sydney hosted the event for the first time at the sprawling international regatta center, which won acclaim when it hosted 825 athletes from 56 countries during the well-attended 2000 Olympic Games.

There were four main categories during the event—Junior (12 to 18 years); Premier (18 to 40), Masters (40 to 50) and Grand Masters (50-plus).

Pacquiao pushes hard to be at his best for Barrera

By Recah Trinidad

LOS ANGELES—HE DID NOT SAY ANYTHING upon arrival, but Manny Pacquiao made a clear statement—he's out to be at his best—when he burst from bed at the break of dawn Sunday and did an unscheduled 30-minute jog to the surprise of aides and handlers.

Pacquiao, in tuck blue workout outfit, a woolen bonnet wrapping his head, braved the chill and reported to the nearby La Brea Park, towing with him team staffers whom he had roused by pulling off their blankets, without saying a word.

Kyla to sing national anthem in Pacman's bout

MANNY PACQUIAO HAS CHOSEN KYLA TO SING THE PHILIPPINE NATIONAL ANTHEM during his Oct. 6 rematch with Mexican icon Marco Antonio Barrera at the Mandalay Bay in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Melanie Hernandez Calumpang in real life, Kyla is the only female local artist to win at the annual MTV Video Music Awards. She edged out other outstanding singers who had expressed interest in singing the national anthem for the event, including Ara Mina, who has an unfinished movie with Pacquiao.

Sales Lagamboy, Contributor

Unlike in previous major preparations when he was wont to issue pre-fight statements, stinging and otherwise, Pacquiao has been going through this championship regimen quietly.

"This definitely augurs well, this must be the calm before the storm," said the head of a Filipino television crew that flew in with Pacquiao from Manila Saturday evening here.

Without using a gauge, Barrera has easily outpaced Pacquiao in the speaking portion of their boiling rivalry.

While the Mexican boxing legend had called Pacquiao an ugly thorn on his side, adding he has been aching all these years to beat his Filipino rival he could actually taste it, the Pacman, who knocked out Barrera four years ago, has kept mum.

The speaking chore has obviously been left to trainer Freddie Roach, who on Sunday, taunted Barrera to come over and watch (spy) Pacquiao train.

Roach, who said they have nothing to hide, added he would make sure Barrera does not use extra thick bandage around his fists in the encounter in Las Vegas.

He returns to the Wild Card gym, which he left Aug. 10 to train in Cebu, Monday (Tuesday in Manila) for some more sparring, originally scheduled at eight rounds, but which promises to break past the day's limit.

"You can say he's just out to be even better than Manny Pacquiao himself," quipped Rolando Hiso whose two fighters (Glenn Gonzales and Jundy Maranon) he co-manages with Vice Gov. Manny Pinol of North Cotabato are listed in the Will to Win card on Oct. 6.

Tubid rolls perfect game

JAYSON TUBID OF TBAM-PRIMA-Powerbowl scored a perfect game Sunday night on the second day of the qualifying in the 11th Sla. Lucia East Tenpin Bowling Association Open.

Tubid rolled his 300 in the Open Masters category and followed this up with 268, 225, and 222 for a 1015 series. He trails Apple Posadas in second place, with Arnold Lecaros of TBAM-Prima third with 936.

Top three in the Grand Masters category were Papio de Dios (955), Ver Nido (926), and Eric Umali (906) all of Sietba.

Ren Cremen of Sietba-Batang X paced the Associate Masters with 896, followed by Joey Mendoza of Sietba (882), and Gelo Mendoza, also of Sietba-Batang X (847).

Marissa Campita of the Pasig Bowling Association (PBA) led the Mixed Ladies division with 886, followed by Dyan Coronel of TBAM-Prima-Powerbowl (774), and Patricia Tajo of Sietba-Batang X (760).

Lito Santarinala of Sietba was up in Senior Masters category with 964, three up on Tony Ayson of TBAM-Prima with Steve Robles of PBA third with 929.

Asean Chess Grand Prix, Masters series launched

LAPU-LAPU CITY—THE SECOND PRESIDENT Gloria Macapagal Arroyo Cup will serve as the inaugural stop of the six-leg Asean Chess Grand Prix 2007-08 which was launched here Sunday night.

Prime movers of the project, which offers a Grand Prix fund of $25,000 were Pide honorary president Florencio Campomanes, Fide's Ignatius Leong of Singapore and Indonesian Grandmaster Utut Adianto.

Staking a total purse of $50,000, the 2nd GMA Cup is slated in November.

The series resumes with the NCFP president Prospero "Butch" Pichay Cup at the Celebrity Sports Plaza in Quezon City, followed by the Singapore Open on Dec. 16-22, the Philippine International Open in Subic in April, the Jakarta Open in May and Vietnam Open in September. Ray Luera

RP-HK seniors golf slated

THE PHILIPPINE GOLF FOUNDATION HAS arranged for a group of Hong Kong decision-makers to compete against some of the country's top senior golfers who are also business executives themselves.

The venue of the dual meet, slated Sept. 25 to 27, is Rancho Palos Verdes Golf and Country Club in Davao City.

The format of the event, dubbed as the RP-Hong Kong Seniors Team Challenge, is patterned after the Ryder Cup.

The RP team is made up of, among others, Philippine Olympic Committee president Jose "Pepeng" Cojuangco, Iggy Clavell, Francis Gaston, Tommy Manotoc, Ritchie Garcia and Rolly Viray.

UST sticking with Jarencio

Coach says he failed the Tigers

By Jasmine W. Payo

TEARS WELLED UP IN HIS EYES AT THE SOUND OF THE FINAL BUZZER.

And it turned out to be a gut-wrenching scene when coach Pido Jarencio, bent down, tried to compose himself as his assistants gave him consoling pats on the back.

The pained expression remained when Jarencio headed for the dugout as the UAAP season came to a painful close for the defending champion Santo Tomas Tigers.

"I wasn't able to prepare the team for a

UAAP warns: Avoid hooliganism, cheer in good conduct

This is the reminder to fans issued by UAAP host University of Santo Tomas yesterday following separate off-court incidents, including one involving commissioner Ed Cordero, during the heated Ateneo-UST semifinal battle last Sunday.

"Let these games be an avenue for further camaraderie... not for hooliganism," said league secretary-treasurer Felicitas Francisco.

Cordero and an Ateneo alumnus nearly came to blows at courtside but were separated by venue security after the Blue Eagles knocked out the defending champions, 69-64, last Sunday at the Araneta Coliseum. Jasmine W. Payo pressure game, for them to be tougher," he said after the Ateneo Blue Eagles wiped out last season's heartache with a 69-64 triumph over the Tigers in a knockout semifinal battle.

"These are kids. Whatever I teach them, that's what you see on court. Ibg sabihin kung ang turo ko (It only means what I taught them wasn't enough)."

Although the Tigers came into the match seeded fourth, the rankings did not matter for this ragtag squad that pulled off a miraculous championship run last year.

"Masama ang loob ka; hindi ko alam ang mangyari sa akin next year, kung nandito pa ako (I'm still hurt; I don't know if I'll still be with the team next year)," said Jarencio, whose contract officially ends this season.

Santo Tomas officials, though, quickly provided the well-loved Jarencio an assurance.

"The community is behind coach Pido," said UAAP board representative Felicitas Francisco of host league UST.

"We will be disappointed if he will be out of the team. We still want him to stay. What's a loss? Fourth is good enough."

Still, Jarencio continued to own up to the missed opportunity of back-to-back titles.

"It's all my fault, it's not the boys' fault," he said.

Jao managed to trim down Buncio's lead to just 11 points but he needs to sweep the last two races while hoping that Buncio finishes fourth in both races to clinch the top plum.

Rod Chua took third place in the morning race while Glen Aguilar and David Pua checked in fourth and fifth, respectively.

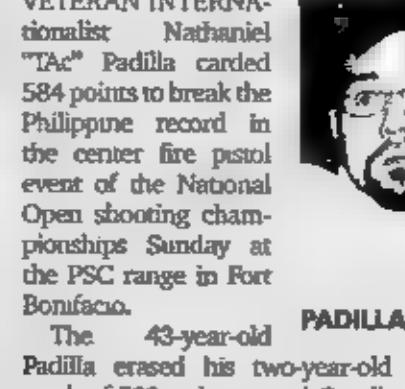

Aguilar went on to sweep the Novice division over runner-up Gherry Chua, Mark Santiago and Carlo Villanueva while Barney Buncio and Simon Salenda split honors in the 400 cc.

Tac smashes nat'l center fire record

VETERAN INTERNATIONALIST Nathaniel "Tac" Padilla carded 548 points to break the Philippine record in the center fire pistol event of the National Open shooting championships Sunday at the PSC range in Fort Bonifacio.

The 43-year-old Padilla erased his two-year-old mark of 583 as he topped Carlino Gonzales (559) and Robert Donalvo (551) en route to his third gold medal in the tournament organized by the Philippine National Shooting Association.

"Felt good during the competition," said Padilla, who had also already qualified for the RP team competing in the Southeast Asian Games for the 15th time.

Padilla, general manager of the family-owned company that produces Spring Cooking Oil, ruled the 25-meter standard pistol event the day before. He tallied 546 to beat Donalvo (545) and Tito Carpio (518).

The other week, the son of former Olympian Manano "Tom" Ong clinched his first gold by topping his favorite event—rapid fire pistol. Tac hit 569 to beat Donalvo (533) and Reuben Hermoso (472).

Other gold medalists: Carlino Gonzales, 50m free pistol and 10m air pistol; Rocky Padilla and Eric Robles, 10m air pistol; Susan Aguado, women's air pistol; Allen Azurin Jr., men's air pistol; Monique Lim Jr., women's air pistol; Dennis Hernandez, 50m rifle 3-position; Clarence Pula, standard pistol, production class; Ermelito Concepcion and Francisco Lu, men's and women's 25m air rifle.

bu, who could shoot accurately beyond the three-point area at a time when there was no three-point rule yet; Leodegario Pilones; Narciso Manalac, Melquades Manasic, Senen Obiadas and Antonio Vidal.

The coach was Angel de Leon, star forward of Letran's 1938 NCAA champion team while the team manager was Prof. Nicancor Limjoco, younger brother of former Securities and Exchange Commission chair Angel Limjoco.

In winning the 1950 NCAA championship, Astorga topscored for Letran with 21 points. Other scorers were Iglesias, 17; Mumar, a 1948 London Olympian, eight; Seguera, who was called "sizoo" by his teammates because he was tall and thin like a beanpole at 6-foot-3, seven; and Tabuena, who would become Games and Amusements Board chair and later airport general manager, six.

The 5-foot-10 1/2 Astorga likewise set a historical precedent in the NCAA: although he was still a junior high school student, he was allowed by the NCAA board to play in the varsity or senior (collegiate) level.

Born to poor parents, Astorga grew up on Leveriza Street, Malate. He developed a well-built physique by working as a stevedore. Simeon Toribio, the famous Olympic high jumper, encouraged him to take up sports. From Letran, he transferred to Far Eastern University where he donned the "Tamaraws" green-and-gold colors for two years. He was also an outstanding student leader.

On his chances to tie the series tomorrow, Letran coach Louie Alas said: "I think we need to play a good 40 minutes instead of a good 36 minutes like we did last Wednesday."

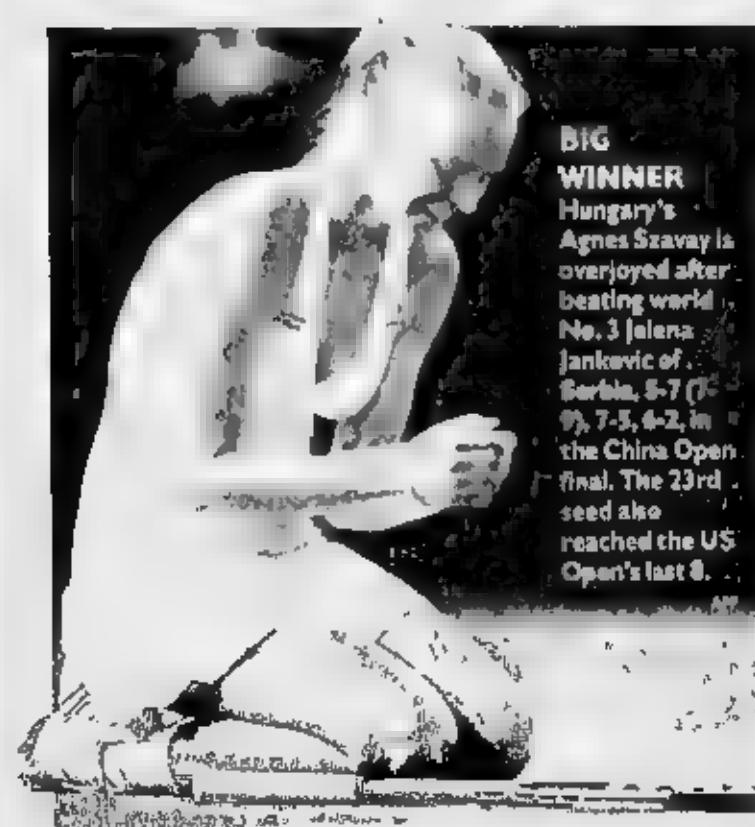

Alas, who won for Letran the NCAA titles in 1998, 2003 and 2005, is aiming to score a repeat and become only the third coach in Letran's storied history since 1928 to win the NCAA crown as a non-alumnus, after the fabled Jacinto Cima Cruz and Gabriel Rajardo. (More next week)

Czech Republic nips Federer's Swiss team

LONDON—ANDY RODDICK PUT THE UNITED STATES BACK IN to the Davis Cup final against Russia, beating Jonas Bjorkman 6-2, 7-6 (3), 6-4, Sunday to give the Americans a 4-1 win over Sweden.

Roddick had little trouble against the veteran Swede, who was playing for 2002 Australian Open champion Thomas Johansson who pulled out with an illness.

Defending champion Russia won both reverse singles matches to beat Germany, 3-2, with Igor Andreev earning the decisive point by beating Philipp Kohlschreiber, 6-3, 3-6, 6-0, 6-3. Earlier, Mikhail Youzhny beat Davis Cup rookie Philipp Petzschner, 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, in Moscow.

In the playoffs, Roger Federer won his second singles match of the weekend to put Switzerland even with the Czech Republic, but Radek Stepanek won the final match to give the Czechs a 3-2 win.

Federer, who is making his 2007 Davis Cup debut in Prague, beat Tomas Berdych, 7-6 (5), 7-6 (10), 6-3. Stepanek then defeated Stanislas Wawrinka, 7-6 (3), 6-3, 7-6 (4).

Novak Djokovic, the U.S. Open finalist, helped Serbia reach the World Group for the first time by beating Chris Guccione, 6-3, 7-6 (3), 7-6 (5), to lead the hosts to a 4-1 win over 28-time champion Australia.

Roddick used his big serve on the Scandinavium arena's fast indoor carpet in Goteborg, not allowing Bjorkman even one break in the match.

"If you would have told me I could get through three sets with Jonas without getting broken I would have questioned your sanity a little bit," said Roddick, who also won his opening singles match.

Bjorkman had his chances in the second set, however, earning two break points at 2-2. But the Swede, at 35 the oldest player in the series, returned long at 15-40 and then Roddick aced him to get to deuce. Roddick held with another ace and a forehand winner.

The 31-time champion Americans will be back in a Davis Cup final since losing to Spain in 2004.

Flesch seizes Turning Stone by two strokes

VERONA, NEW YORK—Steve Flesch carded a one-over 73 on Sunday to capture his second PGA Tour title of the season with a triumph in the Turning Stone Resort Championship.

At 18-under 270, Flesch finished two shots clear of fellow American Michael Allen, who closed with a 68.

Australian John Senden carded a 67 and John Mallinger a 68 to finish tied for third at 15-under 273.

Flesch, who won the Reno-Tahoe Open earlier this season, picked up $1.08 million for the win and will likely have secured himself a spot in the top 30 on the money list and a place in both The Masters and US Open, as well as the World Golf Championships-CA Championship. AFP

Cleveland, LA Angels seal AL titles

LOS ANGELES—THE CLEVELAND INDIANS and Los Angeles Angels sealed American League division titles with solid pitching performances on Sunday.

Jake Westbrook struck out nine in seven innings and Grady Sizemore had four hits as the Indians grabbed the Central Division pennant with a 6-2 win over the Oakland Athletics.

John Lackey won his 18th game as the Angels wrapped up the West Division championship by topping the Seattle Mariners 7-4.

The Central Division title was the first in six years for Cleveland.

"We just wanted to get it done today for Cleveland and the fans here," Westbrook (6-9) told reporters. "I was throwing the ball hard and locating a lot of my pitches. It was fun to pitch."

Sizemore went 4-for-4 and drove in two runs. His fourth-inning triple put the Indians ahead 6-0.

"I wanted to set the tone early," Sizemore said.

Westwood enters £10 million club

COLDFIELD, ENGLAND—LEE WESTWOOD produced a brilliant final round of 65 to win the British Masters and become only the seventh player to reach £10 million ($20 million) prize money on the European Tour.

Westwood, 34, was in dazzling form at The Belfry on Sunday as his seven under par round gave him a five-stroke victory over Ian Poulter.

The former European number one started the day two strokes off the lead but his round featured a 40-foot birdie putt on the 16th and then a 30-footer for eagle at the 564-yard 17th.

It was Westwood's 29th career title and he admitted it was one of his best rounds.

"I've driven it as good as I ever have and holed the putts when I needed to," he said.

Westwood joins Colin Montgomerie, Ernie Els, Retief Goosen, Padraig Harrington, Darren Clarke and Bernhard Langer as a member of the circuit through the £10-million pound barrier.

Tipon, Basadre gain semis in Czech meet

ASIAN GAMES GOLD MEDALIST JOAN TIPON WHIPPED HIS SPANISH rival to join Genebert Basadre in the semifinals of the Ostrava Grand Prix boxing competition in the Czech Republic Saturday.

Tipon, winner of the bantamweight gold in the Doha Asian Games, battered Spaniard Francisco Castillo with a referee-stopped-contest outscored (RSC-O) verdict in the quarterfinals of the slugfest featuring leading boxers from 20 countries.

Earlier, lightweight Basadre entered the medal round by eliminating Alejandro Rodriguez of Spain, 23-19, and will meet top favorite Toth Laszlo of Hungary in the semifinals.

Tipon guns for a finals seat against Hungarian Norbert Kalutzca, who outpunched Eda Khacanian of host Czech Republic, 37-27.

Due to the quirk of the draw and to lack of entries, light flyweight Harry Tanamor has secured a silver medal for the RP-Smart boxing team without throwing a punch.

Tanamor will go for the gold medal against Russian Vadim Idgeshev, a 29-14 winner over Kelvin de la Nieve of Spain, in the finals.

Flyweight Vito Payla, who also won a gold in the Doha Asian, also benefited from the lack of entries as he made it to the finals after a 19-8 win over the Czech Republic's Faber Frantisek, 19-8, in his first bout.

To snare the gold, Payla must hurdle Evgeny Ermakov of Russia, who prevailed by RSC-O over Jose Padilla of Spain in the semifinals.

"The Ostrava GP is part of the preparation of the Smart-RP Boxing team to the coming World Boxing Championships next month in Chicago," said Amateur Boxing Association of the Philippines president Manny T. Lopez.

Three other members of the national team, also backed by Pacific Heights and the Philippine Sports Commission, bowed to superior rivals.

Featherweight Charly Suarez started his campaign by besting Italian Alessio de Savino but lost a closely fought match against Antonin Lazek of the Czech Republic, 23-25.

Light welterweight Delfin Boholst and welterweight Willie Lopez lost their first-round matches to Zdenek Chaldek of the Czech Republic, 13-28, and Italy's Michael Cirillo, 17-22, respectively.

Generals, Doves boost records for Ucaa Final 4

THE DEFENDING CHAMPION EMILIO Agunaldo College Generals and the St. Francis of Assisi College Doves waylaid separate foes yesterday and boosted their bids in the Final Four of the sixth Universities and Colleges Athletic Association (Ucaa) men's basketball tournament at the EAC Sports Complex.

The Generals banked on the free throws of Argei Mendoza and John Vadera in the last nine seconds to up the La Salle-Dasmariñas Patriots, 62-59, for their ninth win in 13 games.

James Castanarez and Leomer Losentes sparked the Doves' breakaway with triples in the third period on the way to an 83-71 whipping of the PSRA Jaguars.

The Generals and the Doves are locked in second spot and their places in the Final Four will be known once the Las Piñas College Blue Lions are through with their games against the Ateneo Lightnings and the UCN Dragons.

The Lightnings (9-3) lead the field. The Jaguars (7-6) and the Blue Lions (7-5) are still disputing the last Final Four berth.

motorcycles. The Grand Vitara is fitted with an electronically controlled five-speed automatic transmission. Very capable off-road, it is equipped with an excellent approach, break-over and departure angles, and 7.9 inches of ground clearance, (7.4 inches for rear-wheel drive models).

The Grand Vitara also offers a sophisticated available Four-Mode full-time four-wheel-drive system with two-speed transfer case. On the road, drivers have the security of full-time four-wheel drive, and when travelling off-road, drivers can use an interior-mounted switch to engage the center differential lock. If the going is really slow, the driver can select the low 4L lock mode for low-speed power and traction.

Advanced Structural Engineering and Chassis Design. All Grand Vitara models feature a new, lightweight yet rigid unibody construction.

driving. The Vitara is built with an off-road chassis and the best off-road performance expected from Suzuki SUVs. The chassis is built with four-wheel independent suspension. MacPherson strut in front and a multi-link in the rear. To provide precise handling both on road and off road, the Grand Vitara has large vented front disc brakes and rear drum brakes and power assisted front and power steering.

Uncompromised Safety Features

The Grand Vitara model is fitted with an array of safety features, including ABS with electronic brakeforce distribution (EBD), and an electronic stability program (ESP). The ESP system monitors a variety of vehicle parameters. In the event of an emergency, such as when unintended over steer or understeer is detected, the system can apply individual brakes and reduce engine torque to help the driver maintain the proper cornering line. Together with the traction control system, the ESP helps ensure vehicle stability and optimum cornering, handling in take off or acceleration, emergency maneuvers, or driving on slippery road surfaces.

The Grand Vitara also features side airbags as standard equipment, driver and front passenger semi-mounted side-impact airbags, supplemental restraint system (SRS), advanced dual-stage front airbag SRS, advanced weight-sensing front passenger airbag SRS and front and rear side-curtain airbags.

The three-point driver and front passenger seat belts feature shoulder height adjustment. In the rear seat, each passenger is provided with a three-point seat belt system and a headrest. The rear child-seat LATCH system (Lowers Anchors and Tethers for Children), along with an interior child safety lock are required, helping to protect your child in case of an accident. The interior is spacious and comfortable with built-in child seats or other accessories, including child features, such as a monitor and chair with adjustable safety of a seat, as well as protective padding and front and rear side impact sensors. The design of the interior helps maintain the integrity of the passenger compartment.

In the event of a collision with a pedestrian, the head of a person is designed to absorb the impact and help prevent serious head injuries. The head end of the car is reinforced by absorbing materials to help reduce the possibility of injury in a collision.

Sleek Sophistication Meets Versatile Functionality

The Grand Vitara is a compact SUV designed for drivers and passengers, and can fit up to 10 cubic feet of cargo space in its rear cargo area. The seats are built in a 60/40 split fold-down configuration. The seats fold down to 60 cubic feet of cargo space. The interior of the Suzuki Grand Vitara is functional and attractive. The list of standard features includes air conditioning with automatic climate control and micron air filtration system, cruise control, digital clock with outside temperature, fuel consumption indicator and adjustable center armrest with internal storage. The Grand Vitara also features a standard AM/FM/CD/MP3 capable audio system, and steering-wheel-mounted audio controls, and an available six-disc in-dash CD changer with six speakers, including two tweeters and a subwoofer.

91-day T-bill fetches rate of 3.759%

Treasury officials accept offers after two failed bids

By Michelle V. Remo

THE BELLWETHER 91-DAY TREASURY BILL rate yesterday shed a basis point to 3.759 percent, ending its consecutive rise since the onset of the US subprime market concerns.

Appetite for the three-month government securities was relatively strong, as tenders reached P2.15 billion, higher than the original debt offering of P1 billion.

But the Bureau of the Treasury's auction committee accepted only P960 million worth of bids. The BTR said the decision to make a partial award of the bids was to ensure that yields on the short-term debt instruments was aligned with those in the secondary market.

Had the BTR accepted P1 billion worth of bids to raise in full the scheduled borrowing, then the rate for the 91-day bill would have reached 3.763 percent.

This would still have been lower than the previously recorded rate of 3.769 percent. But Tan said the BTR wanted a full basis-point drop in the rate.

The 182-day bill likewise fetched a lower rate at 4.832 percent. This marked a similar one-basis-point drop from its previous rate, which stood at 4.842 percent.

Bids for the six-month government securities reached P3.975 billion, higher than the debt offering of P1.5 billion. The BTR accepted P1.5 billion worth of bids.

Tan said the drop in the 91- and 182-day T-bill rates was partly due to market expectations that the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas might slash its borrowing and lending rates after the US Federal Reserve cuts its own policy rate.

The BSP's overnight borrowing rate stands at 6 percent, while its lending rate is at 8 percent.

The Fed last week cut its policy rate to 4.75 percent from 5.25 percent, in an effort to boost the sluggish US economy.

A drop in US interest rates has given local monetary officials enough elbow room to cut the BSP's policy rates and further pump-prime the Philippine economy.

Investors usually seek higher interests from debt instruments issued by perceivably risky borrowers, like the

US subprime crisis seen to worsen, heighten risks

By Doris C. Dumla

THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND has warned that the US subprime mortgage crisis could drag on, at least through 2008, and possibly expose emerging markets to greater risks, as credit and market discipline in global markets continue to weaken.

In its Global Financial Stability Report, the IMF said financial risks had increased and underlying conditions worsened since its last assessment in April, when it discussed the rising deterioration in US subprime mortgage credit, or loans given to borrowers with imperfect credit history and little equity.

"The period ahead may be difficult, as bouts of turbulence are likely to recur and the adjustment process will take some time," the IMF said in the new report. "Uncertainty about the final size of losses, and when and where they will be revealed, will likely continue to keep market sentiment and conditions unsettled in the near term."

The current crisis is largely attributed to lax credit underwriting standards, as well as unfavorable employment trends in the world's

PSE COMPOSITE INDEX SEPTEMBER

(See stock market report on Page B2)

The composite index finished up 10.72 points to 3,434.45 after trading in a narrow range of 3,423.73 and 3,441.84.

Gainers led losers 66 to 45 while 54 stocks were unchanged. Volume traded was 5.9 billion shares worth P3.3 billion ($73 million).

Index leader Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. added 5.00 pesos to P2,805.

Strong gold prices helped mining shares to post some of the day's biggest gains. Phoenix Mining, the nation's biggest miner by market value, gained 20 centavos to P7.60.

San Miguel Corp. A shares shed one peso at P60, while the B shares were unchanged at P61.

Greenspan tells all

I DECIDED NOT TO WRITE last week because my article would have coincided with the day Bernanke announced his decision. That seemed to be rather ill timed so I decided to wait and see what he would do. To be honest, I thought he would cut interest rates by a quarter-point and await the next job-creation figures because they are always revised, up or down, by as much as 60,000. So last month's figures might be up 50,000 or down 50,000. In the first case, the cut would not have been justified; in the second case, there would have been room for another half-point by the end of the year.

However, I feel sure that President Bush pressured him, as 2008 is election year and the last thing the President needs is a recession to add to his unpopularity over the war in Iraq.

In Greenspan's book, of which I have read numerous extracts, he said he got on well with Ford, Nixon and Clinton but not with Bush. The President was uncaring about the eventual demise of Medicare 10 years hence and would not listen to Greenspan's plea to increase contributions, reduce benefits to those still working or extend the retirement age.

Bush was more preoccupied with Iran's oil. This bombshell pleased the Democrats no end and depressed the Republicans, who are set for a major defeat.

Of course, the stock market was delighted, as a few economists expected a half-point cut, and the Dow has risen to an all-time peak. Greenspan admitted he had been lucky because he had been working in a 'distrustful' era whereas the Fed is now facing the possibility of inflation next year. Central banks all over the world have been raising rates, often several times, and Chung has raised its bank rate for the fifth time this year, as well as increasing bank deposits to take liquidity out of the system. Given this background, Bernanke's decision was not an easy one especially as the core inflation measurement excludes food and oil, now at a record level.

MR. BEARBULL

There is no doubt that the housing market will continue declining for at least a year, both in terms of new starts and prices. People who bought homes with little or no deposit and adjustable mortgage rate were either ignorant of the danger or were just gambling that they could sell their homes at a profit. It is not the job of the US Fed to bail out the speculators but it is hard to distinguish between them so the President wants to spend a vast sum of money to bail everybody out. In practice, this is just a political play and many foolish people will lose their homes.

Greenspan admitted that he did not foresee this bubble but said it was a product of euphoria and was not visible until the bubble burst. We had the same thing with the Internet bubble when stocks were selling on Price/Earnings ratios of 500. At that time, I was warning clients not to touch Nasdaq stocks as they were grossly overvalued. Eventually, many went bankrupt while survivors fell by as much as 95 percent and I am talking about well-known companies. I also warned investors back in 1993, when the Nikkei was at 39,500. NTT had a rights issue on a price earnings ratio of 240. I said this was crazy and told everyone to sell the Japanese market. It eventually dropped 80 percent and has still not recovered.

The latest consumer prices have turned negative, which is a bad sign and there is no doubt that the US economy will slow down. I don't think it will go into recession but the growth rate in the election year might well be between 1 percent and 2 percent. This will have some effect on Asian countries, particularly exporters, but should not affect the Philippines unduly as we mainly reassemble. A reduction in US interest rates will strengthen Asian currencies, including the peso, and push up gold as a hedge. Gold is hedging against the ever-declining dollar by buying euros and gold as well. Although gold looks high, it is still well below its 1980 high of $850 and allowing for 27 years of inflation, gold has a long way to catch up.

The American dividend season has started. I expect most companies other than banks will continue to grow. Any slowdown is unlikely to manifest itself before the fourth quarter and more likely in the first quarter of 2008. Our dividend season starts after that of the US ends because we are much slower in preparing our accounts.

The government has been advertising in all the newspapers that the GDP in the second quarter was 7.5 percent. This included massive expenditure on infrastructure, food, drinks and vote buying. It will not be repeated in the third or fourth quarter or next year. As for the BIR exceeding its tax target for August, the percentage was tiny and in the first seven months, it is still way behind its goal. Do not get carried away by statistics, they can be presented to mean almost anything. I remember years ago in London when birth control pills were controversial, a spokesperson claimed that a young woman had taken the pill and was dead 15 minutes later. He omitted to mention that she was killed by a drunken driver.

The risk factor on the PHISIX is very high and although the index is likely to rise again on Monday, investors should avoid getting carried away and chasing the market. There should be a correction fairly soon. Seasonally, October to December is the best time to invest so perhaps we will have a sideways trend until the window-dressing period on Dec. 31. PX has been a good performer, based on its excellent monthly exports of copper and gold at favorable prices.

Eton launches Makati condo

By Elizabeth Sanchez-Lacson

ETON PROPERTIES PHILS. INC., THE property arm of the Lucio Tan Group, yesterday launched its second condominium project in Greenbelt, Makati City, which targets professionals working in the central business district.

Eton president Danilo Ignacio said during the launch yesterday that the 34-story Eton Parkview Residences is on Gamboa Street behind the Asian Institute of Management.

The project will offer 230 all-loft units. A one-bedroom unit ranges from 40 to 57 square meters, and will sell at about P3.6 million.

A two-bedroom unit on the other hand, which is about 70 sqm, costs about P6.5 million.

Parkview follows Eton's first project in Greenbelt - The Greenbelt Residences - which as of July is 90-percent sold.

Eton Parkview is in front of two parks - the Washington Sycip Park and Legaspi Park and is close to the Greenbelt Mall. It is a foreclosed asset of Allied Bank. The turnover for completed Eton Parkview units is scheduled for December 2011.

Eton also unveiled yesterday a partnership with sister company Allied Banking Corp. to offer home mortgage financing rates at 5.5 percent to 8.38 percent for a fixed period, much lower than the industry average of 8.5 percent lowest rate.

Allied Bank president Reynaldo Maclang said the housing loan will offer 5-10, 15- and 20-year terms to interested home buyers at fixed interest rates.

Initially, the home loan financing will be offered exclusively to buyers of Eton's twin tower residential project in Ortigas dubbed

BREAKTIME

Conrado R.
Banal III

IT LOOKS LIKE THE NOTORIOUS "Napocor mafia" is dead serious in its plan to maim the Epira law.

Backed up by the "cappo de tutti cappi" (i.e., Malacañang), the Napocor mafia just got an opening for a possible hit—and in the Senate, at that.

Don't tell me that senators are in the mafia's hit squad!

In case you had buried yourself the whole of last week—perhaps to get away from all the antics of Speaker Jose "Yoda" de Venecia's fair-haired boy—let me inform you that, last Wednesday, the Senate already conducted its first hearing on the Epira amendments.

The target is the provision in the law that requires Napocor to privatize all of its power plants by 2009, or two years from now.

At the moment, Napocor is already violating the law, because it failed to follow the provision that it should sell at least 70 percent of its power plants by 2006.

So far, Napocor has privatized only 28 percent. Grudgingly, too!

In the first Senate hearing last week, experts in the power industry testified that nothing is wrong with the Epira.

They indicated that, on the contrary, the problem lies in the people who are supposed to implement the law. They are taking forever to privatize the plants, period.

Crucial in the success of the Epira—which was designed to bring down electricity rates in a country that boasts of having the second highest power costs in the whole of Asia—is some honest to-goodness competition in the power sector.

That is impossible to achieve, obviously, since Napocor still exercises monopolistic control in the sector.

For instance, Napocor president Cyril del Cailar was involved in a price-fixing scandal last year in the so-called WESM, or the wholesale electricity spot market.

Thanks to that price manipulation, which by the way was already proven by the Energy Regulatory Commission, we must now bear a P2-per kilowatt hour increase in our electricity bills.

Or take Napocor's order of coal supply early this year, for which we paid a stiff price of $80 to $125 per ton, even when the prevailing price at that time was only $60 per ton.

Guess what? We still must pay for it, overpriced and all.

Now we are treated to this legislative lobby of the same guys who brought us much suffering. They want to keep the Napocor monopoly by amending the Epira. Of course they also get to keep their rackets.

And so, if the senators do not see through such a scheme, are we in trouble!

OKAY, PERHAPS to end the circus in the Senate about that contract with the Chinese firm ZTE, this administration was forced to cancel it.

But is the Palace really convinced that the cancellation can hush all the noise over the issue?

There really is something more to it than just plain pesos and centavos or, to be more precise, dollars and cents.

According to a Cabinet member, most top guns of this administration are talking about the geopolitics behind the issue, which should pit the interest of the world's only superpower, which happens to be the United States, in this part of the world against that of the world's next emerging superpower, which is China. Nay ko!

Anyway, caught in the clash between China and US interests, which should only be painful for us down here is the cyber education project of the Department of Education.

What do they call it again in the killing business, "collateral damage"?

Okay, the DepEd project may be tainted because of the allegations on the NBN project of the DOTC, since both of them involved Chinese groups.

But so far, the DepEd project has no contract. Again, NO contract! It is still only a memorandum of agreement—just a fucking MOA—that was unfortunately bunched together with the NBN contract.

If something is wrong with the MOA on the "cyber education" project, by all means let us correct it.

I mean, if the roof is leaking, you don't burn the whole house!

Malacañang cannot just drop the project to appease some groups who stand to make a lot of money, if they have not already made tons of it, from the botched NBN project.

The country needs the cyber education project. This much is clear. It is the only solution to our gigantic problems in education.

Look, all our neighbors are already into satellite-fed hi-tech school lectures. We are still using stone tablets.

And we are amazed that our kids are falling behind the rest of the world in mathematics and science subjects?

NOW IF THE aim of Yoda's fair-haired boy is to kill the ZTE contract, presumably because it is costly for us, perhaps we can now expect him and his group to go all out in pursuing the NBN project.

Bear in mind that Joey de Venecia did not attack the NBN project. By golly, he wanted it for himself, didn't he?

Unfortunately for him, the validity of the ZTE contract is still up to the judiciary.

To get the NBN project, therefore, Joey de Venecia will have to wait for his chance, if and when the court decides to nullify the ZTE contract.

Never mind that it is the same project that was already shot down during the administrations of Fidel "Kuya Eddie" Ramos, Joseph "Whist Band" Estrada and even Gloria "the Lola" Macapagal-Arroyo.

From what I hear, the Lola at first shot it down when it was brought to her by, who else, the group of Yoda, who seem to have mastered the China connection.

By the way, it is the same group that is said to be behind the company called Philippine Broadband that was fortunate enough to have gotten one of only two broadband frequency assignments from the National Telecommunications Commission.

The other is owned by Mendan of Mark Jimenez, which was sold to PLDT for hundreds of millions.

How come only those two got the frequencies worth billions of pesos?

Philippine government, than what they require from securities issued by the United States. Domestic interest rates should therefore be higher than US interest rates to attract investors

Only the 364-day bills fetched a higher interest rate, hitting 5.643 percent, or 3.6 basis points higher than its previous rate of 6.607 percent.

It was the first time that the Bureau of the Treasury accepted bids for the one-year bills after two consecutive auctions, where all tenders for these instruments were rejected.

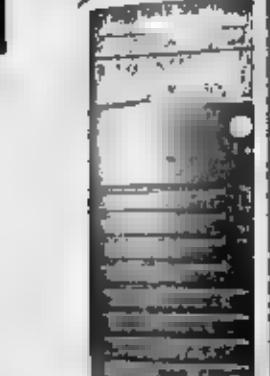

The rejections, according to treasury officials, were made due to "absurdly high" rates sought by investors.

AEI Marks Six Years of Excellence

Asian Eye Institute held its 6th anniversary celebration at The Loft at Manansala Towers in Rockwell Center, Makati City. The highlights of the anniversary were the introduction of the Institute's new president, Benjamin K. Liboro, and the presentation of service and recognition awards to employees. Present during the anniversary were AEI Chairman Mr Oscar Lopez, Mr. Manolo Lopez, Mr. Jose Cuisla partners and friends.

AEI launches Medical Travel

Asian Eye Institute now offers patients a medical travel package that combines world-class eye treatment, at a more reasonable cost than in the US and other countries, with a relaxing vacation in some of the best establishments and resorts in the Philippines, under special rates and packages. Patients have the option to stay while on treatment in Makati Shangri-La Hotel, Hotel Intercontinental, and Oxford Suites Makati. For leisure travel choices of resorts include Alegria Beach in Cebu, Seawind in Boracay, and Club Noah in Palawan.

We also understand the feeling of anxiety and the need for special care of patients who are away from home while undergoing treatment. Our International Customer Service Group, composed of different Asian nationals, will be happy to facilitate your medical visit. Language interpretation (for Japanese, Korean, Chinese, Indian, Indonesian, and German) is a value added service that is offered within the facility, free of charge.

Not qualified for lasik? There are options

Many patients come to Asian Eye Institute (AEI) to undergo laser surgery because they are tired of the hassle of wearing eyeglasses or contact lenses.

LASIK remains to be the most popular form of laser vision correction. In LASIK, we cut a thick flap on the cornea, vaporize tissue with the laser and reposition the flap afterwards. Having a thick flap protects the (lasered area) eyes from infection and hastens healing.

But not everyone is qualified for LASIK. In around two to five percent of cases, the corneal thickness is not enough to accommodate cutting a flap, removing tissue for laser correction and still have enough thickness to maintain the strength and structural integrity of the cornea over the next few years. If the cornea is too thin, it weakens and deformation occurs, leading to irregular grade or astigmatism. This condition is called ectasia. Additional laser surgery is not advisable because it may further weaken an already thin cornea. Patients would then need to go back to wearing eyeglasses or hard contact lenses.

Each person is born with a pre-determined corneal thickness, and this does not change even as we age. During the screening test before LASIK, we perform specific measurements and if the corneal thickness after computation falls below the internationally accepted guidelines, we inform the patient that LASIK may not be the safest procedure to correct their grade with the use of laser.

We suggest surface ablation procedures such as PRK (Photorefractive keratectomy), LASEK (Laser epithelial keratomileusis) or EpiLASIK. Among these treatments, EpiLASIK and LASEK are widely used because a thin layer of cells is preserved and returned over the part of the cornea that received laser treatment for protection and to aid in healing.

In June 2007, AEI presented its results at an international convention of laser surgeons in Bangkok and showed that EpiLASIK and LASEK are safe and effective in the treatment of nearsightedness and astigmatism.

The AEI offers a full range of laser vision correction procedures. Its strict screening protocol ensures a safe recommendation of what is best for each individual.

Goodbye Astigmatism with Toric IOLs

Intraocular lenses (IOLs) are artificial lenses placed in the eye to restore vision after removal of a clouded natural lens (cataract). The latest generation of IOL—called Toric IOL—can now correct astigmatism and improve visual results after cataract surgery or refractive lens exchange. Astigmatism is the irregular shape of an eye that prevents light from being focused sharply and causes blurred vision and inability to see fine details. The Toric IOL simultaneously corrects poor vision from cataract, near and farsightedness, and now, astigmatism, a relief for astigmatic patients! The Asian Eye Institute is one of the pioneers in using ACRYSOF® Toric IOL technology (Alcon). ACRYSOF® Toric IOLs have been shown in clinical studies to provide good distance vision, without the use of spectacles or contact lenses. In patients who have undergone cataract surgery or refractive lens exchange, there are no known contraindications and no additional risks to its use.

Hope for macular degeneration: Anti-VEGF drugs

Age-related macular degeneration (AMD) affects one of four elderly patients (>65 years old) and is the leading cause of blindness in developed countries. Symptoms of AMD include blurred central vision leading to inability to read or drive. When a patient develops the wet form of AMD—when abnormal blood vessels leak or bleed, damaging the retina—blindness usually takes place within two years. Previously, wet AMD was treated with lasers, which at best would slow down the rate of visual loss. There was practically no hope for regaining vision.

Two years ago, doctors from the Asian Eye Institute pioneered in the Philippines a treatment for wet AMD using anti-VEGF drugs, which cause rapid closure of the abnormal blood vessels. Use of these drugs leads to restoration or improvement of vision in around 80 percent of eyes. Due to these exciting results, anti-VEGF drugs have become the standard of care for wet AMD. For the first time, patients can now expect improvement in their vision from anti-VEGF treatments. Available treatments include: Macugen (Pfizer), Lucentis (Novartis), and Avastin (Roche).

SLT: A revolutionary treatment for Glaucoma

A revolutionary treatment for glaucoma, Selective Laser Trabeculoplasty (SLT) controls eye pressure, minimizing the use of eye drops. SLT opens clogged drains in the eye and restores eye pressure back to a safe level to prevent further progression of the disease. Effective and successful for most open-angle glaucoma patients, SLT is a clear alternative for conditions not controlled with previous laser surgery or eye drops. It is painless and non-invasive, and does not involve needles, knives or sutures. It is simple and convenient. The procedure takes only five minutes, and involves no restrictions or limitations for the patient after treatment. It may also replace the daily use of expensive eye drops.

The effect of the laser may wear off over time. Serious complications with SLT are extremely rare, but like any other surgical procedure, it has some risks. Going to an eye doctor experienced in SLT can minimize such occurrences. Ask your glaucoma specialists at AEI about this new laser for glaucoma.

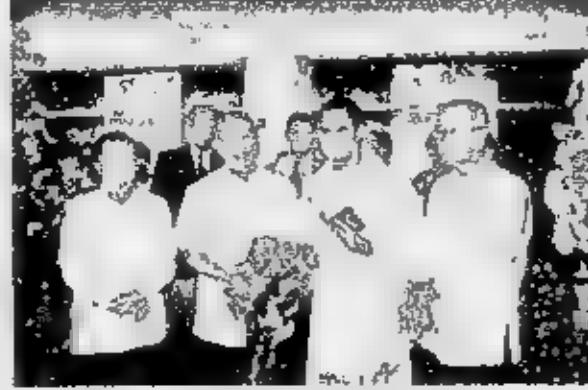

Asian Eye Institute at Six: FORWARD AND NORTHWARD

AEI opens satellite clinic in TriNoma

AEI in TriNoma hopes to serve the eye care and treatment needs of people who live in the northern part of Metro Manila, especially residents of Quezon City, Malabon, Caloocan, Valenzuela, and nearby provinces like Bulacan and Pampanga.

"We went right in the direction where the compass needle always points: North."

With these words, Oscar M. Lopez, chief of the Lopez Group of Companies, formally inaugurated last Aug. 7 the new satellite clinic of Asian Eye Institute (AEI) in TriNoma, the new Ayala mall in north Quezon City.

Lopez founded this world-class eye center in 2001 with renowned U.S.-based Filipino ophthalmologist, Dr. Felipe I. Tolentino, who was at the occasion together with Quezon City Mayor Feliciano Belmonte, Jr.

"This new clinic in TriNoma, the Institute's first satellite, signals our readiness for growth," Lopez said, noting AEI's commitment to bring its services closer to the people, especially to those who live in the northern cities and provinces. Quezon City is the largest in Metro Manila and the gateway to the metropolis for those coming in from the northern part of Luzon.

Lopez also noted AEI's commitment to "discover and deliver" more innovative and efficient services to its patients through continuing research. "We want to make sure that the advances made abroad through research and education also find their way here where we can make use of them directly or adapt them to suit our needs more closely and thereby benefit more of our people," he said.

Meanwhile, AEI founding President and Medical Director Dr. Tolentino took the occasion as an opportunity to highlight the uniqueness of the Institute, which he considers as the reason why the Institute is able to offer first-rate services.

"AEI is unique because our medical staff is committed full time to serve our patients, and they have the passion to improve the outcome of their treatment through research," he said.

The Institute conducts research and works with noted pharmaceutical companies for developing drugs that would advance eye care and treatment.

The opening of the new AEI clinic in TriNoma, according to Tolentino, coincides with AEI's sixth year anniversary in September, and "the Institute looks back with much pride for all its accomplishments through all those years," he said.

Mayor Belmonte, for his part, expressed gratitude to AEI for choosing Quezon City as the location of its first satellite clinic. "AEI's presence in TriNoma affirms the City's booming economy and improving lifestyle of our people; now we can say that our residents here in the City can avail of high quality health care services," he said.

In addition to its expansion and research pursuits, AEI also continues its social and community service projects. In 2006, AEI, the Ophthalmological Foundation of the Philippines, and the Quezon City government signed an agreement to provide free cataract surgeries to select indigents of the City. The program is ongoing.

The TriNoma clinic offers general eye consultations, diagnosis and management of diseases (e.g. cataract, glaucoma, retinal diseases, strabismus), screening for LASIK (laser eye surgery), and pediatric eye care. Clinic hours are 10AM to 6PM, 7 days a week, with at least one in-clinic ophthalmologist daily. Surgeries are all done in AEI Rockwell to ensure the controlled environment so necessary in eye procedures.

Our Services

Treatment and Management of Diseases

AEI offers comprehensive eye examinations and diagnostic checks, laser procedures or surgery for cataract, uveitis, glaucoma and retinal diseases. It also diabetic retinopathy, macular degeneration, retinal detachment, retinal vein occlusion, and macular holes.

AEI performs modern cataract surgery under eye drop anesthesia—no stitches, no confinement. We give our patients a choice of the latest intraocular lenses (IOL) from the U.S. and Europe. AEI was the first in the Philippines to introduce advanced medicines for macular degeneration and thereby offer hope for patients to regain vision.

LASIK (Refractive Laser Eye Surgery)
AEI offers the ideal lifestyle solution for those who want to get rid of their eyeglasses and contact lenses. LASIK is fast, safe, and virtually painless. The entire procedure takes about five minutes per eye, and patients can return to their normal routine like working, reading and driving within one to two days. The Institute specializes in Zyoptix customized and aspheric LASIK, which are performed by a full-time, dedicated eye surgeon.

Oculoplastic Surgery
Eyelid deformities can cause eyelashes to grow inward, causing injury to the surface of the eye and also blocking vision. AEI's eye plastic surgery service specializes in fixing such deformities. It also offers cosmetic enhancements, such as adding the eyelid fold that most Asian women want to have.

Pediatric Ophthalmology
Children also have vision problems but some may be unable to communicate this to their parents. Such conditions, if left untreated, may permanently limit a child's visual potential. Bringing a child to AEI for his first complete eye examination may be one of a parent's most important decisions.

Low Vision and Visual Rehabilitation
Our Low Vision Center specializes in the evaluation and rehabilitation of patients to maximize their remaining eyesight and enable them to enjoy quality of life despite their vision problems. AEI has a full range of low vision devices and a rehabilitation facility to help address varying requirements.

Contact Lens Service
AEI provides evaluation and management of all contact lens needs and problems, including nearsightedness, farsightedness, and astigmatism. It offers conventional, toric, aspheric, bifocal, multifocal, and other customized contact lens designs.

Optical Dispensary
AEI's Rockwell facility has an Optical Dispensary with a wide selection of frames, sunglasses, protective sports eyewear, and other accessories. A quality assurance system is in place to ensure we dispense only quality optical products.

DTI-listed investments up 26%

By Ronald W. Domingo

INVESTMENTS REGISTERED WITH the Department of Trade and Industry's incentives-granting agencies rose 26 percent to P158 billion in January to August this year from year-ago's P126 billion.

In a statement, Trade Secretary Peter B. Favila said the increase showed the level of confidence of both local and foreign investors in the country.

DTI data showed that from January to August, the Board of Investments approved P69 billion worth of projects while the Philippine Economic Zone Authority registered another P89 billion.

Of the total, foreign investors accounted for P80.7 billion or 51 percent of the total, with the American's committing P28.2 and the Japanese, P27 billion.

Favila said the manufacturing sector accounted for 38.4 percent or P60.61 billion of the committed investments, while real estate accounted for P34.8 billion (22 percent), electricity and gas infrastructure, P15.3 billion (9.7 percent); and information technology, P10.9 billion (6.9 percent).

Last year's investments in the manufacturing sector was P31.4 billion.

The biggest projects were Mabuhay Vinyl's P564.6-million facility for the manufacture of caustic soda and hydrochloric acid and liquid and Pilipinas Kyohritsu's P453.3-million automotive wiring harness venture.

Favila said further growth in investments was expected especially in infrastructure development.

Trade Undersecretary Elmer C. Hernandez said the projects approved so far were expected to create 93,164 new jobs.

PNOC-EDC attracts 24 potential bidders

Gov't expects to raise P32-P36B from sale

By Abigail L. Ho

PHILIPPINE NATIONAL OIL CO. HAS ATTRACTED 24 potential bidders for its 60-percent stake in PNOC Energy Development Corp., the country's largest geothermal energy development company.

The state firm is selling 6 billion common and 7.5 billion preferred shares representing 26.67 percent and 33.33 percent, respectively, of PNOC-EDC's outstanding capital stock.

The 24 groups that met yesterday's noon deadline for the submission of letters of interest included ABN-AMRO Bank, Abott Power Corp., Africa Israel Group-Asia Pacific, Alsons Consolidated Resources Inc., American Orient Capital Partners (Philippines) Inc., Ashmore Energy, ATN Holdings Inc., Belo Gozon Elma Parei Asuncion & Lucilla, Basic Energy Corp., First Gen Corp., Geysir Green Energy represented by Sycip Salazar and International Power Plc.

The other potential bidders included Kanematsu Corp., Latham & Watkins LLP, Marubeni Philippines Corp., One Energy Ltd., Orix Corp., PCCI Securities Brokers Corp., Reykjavik Energy Invest, Rosalie A. Dimaano, Suez Energy Asia Co. Ltd., Sumitomo Corp., Sycip Salazar Hernandez & Gatmaitan Law Offices and Trutna Holdings Corp.

They are vying for the majority stake of PNOC-EDC, which accounts for 60 percent of the country's installed geothermal power plants, with an installed capacity of 1,198 megawatts.

During yesterday's prebid conference, Development Bank of the Philippines president Reynaldo David said the state-owned financial institution was trying to arrange financing for the winning bidder.

"We understand that the timetable is tight and the magnitude is quite substantial. That's why we're trying to arrange some financing. This is not a promise, but we're trying our best. We're working toward that," he said. "It will be good for the winning bidder to have some backup financing."

DBP is the financial advisor for the transaction.

According to the bidding timetable, potential investors have until Oct. 5 to submit the initial prequalification requirements, including the confidentiality agreement and undertaking.

The PNOC Privatization Committee will release the list of prequalified bidders on Oct. 10.

Prequalified bidders will be required to pay a nonrefundable fee of $5,000 on Oct. 11 12 for them to avail themselves of the draft transaction documents, the information package and the due diligence procedures.

Only the prequalified bidders will be allowed to conduct due diligence audit on the shares to be sold.

They will then be required to submit final qualification documents by 7 p.m. of Oct. 26, with those who will be able to pass this final screening to be given until 9 a.m. of Nov. 21 to turn in their bids.

The notice of award will be issued to the winning bidder by Nov. 22, with payment of the entire bid price to be remitted by Nov. 30, the scheduled closing date of the transaction.

In an earlier interview, Finance Secretary Margarito Teves said the sale of the PNOC-EDC stake would fetch for the government P32 billion and P36 billion.

But PNOC president Antonio Cailao expects the PNOC-EDC shares to generate even more than that.

Customs vows to raise additional P12B in revenue

By Michelle V. Remo

THE BUREAU OF CUSTOMS HAS COMMITTED to generate P12 billion more than its revenue target in the remaining four months of the year.

In last week's BOC command conference meeting presided by President Macapagal-Arroyo, Customs Commissioner Napoleon Morales said his office would meet its collection target for the full year despite a shortfall in the first half.

He said measures like automation of its operations would help plug revenue leaks and curb smuggling and help the BOC exceed its collection target for September to December.

The BOC is tasked to collect P228.2 billion for the entire year. For January to August, it was supposed to collect P145.946 billion to stay on track of its full-year target. Actual collection was only P133.894 billion.

Its official target for September to December was set at P82.254 billion, but the BOC vowed to collect P94.306 during the period.

Raising P94.306 billion in September to December would enable the BOC to meet its full-year target.

Due to the shortfalls in the collections of BOI and Bureau of Internal Revenue in the first half, the government breached its budget deficit ceiling during the period.

The Department of Finance, mother agency of the BIR and the BOC, said the government was back on track to meeting its goal of reducing the deficit for the year to only P63 billion after these agencies' collection performance improved in July and August.

Peso seen hitting 42:$1

By Doris C. Dumiao

AMERICAN EXPRESS BANK SEES THE PESO surging to as high as 42:$1 in the next three months on the country's improved macroeconomic fundamentals and reduced global investor aversion to emerging markets.

The peso yesterday closed stronger at 45.155 from Friday's 45.31 to the US dollar as last week's 50-percentage cut in the US Federal Reserve's benchmark rate made Asian currencies and equities more attractive to investors.

In its currency outlook for September-October, the London-based global economics unit of Amex said lower risk aversion would boost peso value.

The bank assigned a 15-percent risk of the peso depreciating by over 10 percent against the greenback in the next three months. Over a 12-month period, Amex sees the peso holding at about 44:$1.

"The improved fiscal performance should remain on track and economic growth will likely stay well-supported by household spending, business investment and government spending, despite the Philippines' high exposure to the prospect of weaker exports," Amex said.

For this year, even the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas has scaled down its export growth outlook to 8 percent from an earlier forecast of 11 percent.

"Worker remittance inflows are also well-diversified and will probably hold at a high level," Amex added.

biggest economy.

"Regardless of whether collateral quality improves, the effects of previous excesses are likely to continue at least through 2008," the IMF said.

While potential losses appeared manageable, and banks are well capitalized to weather more severe stress, the IMF cited considerable uncertainty regarding the magnitude and distribution of losses stemming from the turmoil in credit markets and their possible impact on broader financial stability.

Reflecting a weakening in credit discipline that emerged along with the growth in credit, the IMF said private sector borrowers in certain emerging markets were adopting relatively risky strategies to raise financing, thus increasing their exposure to volatility.

The IMF noted that in some countries in Eastern Europe and Central Asia, for instance, banks were increasingly using capital market financing to help finance credit growth.

"Banks that rely predominantly on bond financing are more vulnerable to a sudden drop in demand for bonds—either due to a rise in domestic loan defaults or an increase in global risk aversion—triggering funding difficulties for the banks," the IMF said.

Lower-rated banks are at risk if appetite from international investors suddenly declines, potentially raising the systemic risks for some banking systems, it stressed.

International banks are often unwilling to lend to such banks through the interbank market, owing to the difficulty in assessing their true financial condition. But these same banks can still issue international bonds, though the risk is reflected in wider spreads, the Fund explained.

The IMF said governments must thus ensure that such vulnerabilities would not build to more systemic levels.

In addition to currency risk, the IMF said emerging markets had also grown more vulnerable to a rise in volatility.

Gentle care for baby skin

By Vangie Baga-Reyes

BABY SKIN MAY always seem soft and smooth. But it is also extremely sensitive, vulnerable to dryness and irritation.

A recent clinical assessment of infant skin in the United States found that more than 60 percent of babies tested had clinically visible dry skin.

Frequent bathing can remove the natural oils of baby skin leaving it dry and cracked. The use of strong laundry detergent for clothes can cause itchiness or inflammation of the skin.

Sometimes the problem arises because parents think adult products they use will also be good for their little ones.

"A child is not a small adult," said pediatric dermatologist Donna Leehn-Sarcosa. "Every pediatrician knows that significant

The soft, smooth young complexion that adults envy also needs the right products to stay that way anatomic and physiologic differences exist between children and adults. Structurally, infant skin is thinner, and its components are likewise decreased in number.

"The differences place the infant at increased risk of skin damage, percutaneous (skin-absorbed) infection and toxicity from [the external application of some] agents."

To help parents protect baby skin right from infancy, Johnson's, a pioneer in research on baby skin with over 100 years of experience in developing gentle products for youngsters, introduced recently Johnson's Baby Soothing Naturals.

It combines the mildness of Johnson's products with the healing power of nature.

For baby's bath, there is Johnson's Baby Soothing Naturals Moisture Rich Wash that helps restore lost moisture. This contains the No More Tears formula and is as gentle as pure water.

Then, there is the Johnson's Baby Soothing Naturals Nourishing Lotion that soothes and helps

MOMS and their Johnson's babies: Johnson's Baby brand manager Via Abaño and daughter Amelie, Lexi Shultz Berenguer-Testa and little Alba, Marta Araneta and baby Tamara, and Sheila Carlos and son Enzo baby skin retain moisture for 24 hours.

Both have Johnson's signature mild, fresh and natural scent. The products have been clinically proven to relieve babies' dry skin and they work for all skin types.

The products have been developed with pediatricians and clinically tested by dermatologists," said brand manager Via Abaño. Johnson's Baby Soothing Naturals is formulated with a proprietary blend of vitamin E, olive-leaf extract, minerals and essential amino acids to help care for babies' developing skin."

While most products available today contain only one form of vitamin E, the Soothing Naturals has all four types: alpha, beta, delta and gamma tocopherol. They, said Abaño, could protect the skin and neutralize harmful free radicals in the environment.

The olive-leaf extract has been used since ancient times for its antioxidant properties giving it the ability to help fight disease-causing free radicals. It also promotes skin elasticity.

The combination of minerals and essential amino acids in the new product plays an important part in skin metabolism and water balance.

"We know there are already a lot of products that have components like vitamin E but Soothing Naturals is the only product that has all the three features," Abaño said.

Prevention

Parents should not wait until signs of dryness appear on baby's skin before they begin to moisturize. Prevention is key.

White moisturizers may be applied any time of the day, parents must immediately moisturize baby's skin right after a bath while the skin is still moist. This traps water in the skin, replaces any normal oil lost, and provides lubrication to the skin.

Badging with gentle baby wash and applying lotion on young skin are essential to keep their skin in perfect condition.

Johnson's Soothing Naturals was simultaneously launched only recently in Southeast Asian countries, although it has been available in the United States and Europe since last year.

Abaño said the Soothing Naturals' lotion cost more than its other products already in the market "because the ingredients are very premium."

She said, "The wash and lotion can be used from infancy up to two years old and even beyond if the child continues to have skin problems. The use of the products can continue with no harmful effects."

Even adults may like the new Johnson's line.

Abaño said the lotion, for instance, could appeal to women who normally liked something mild and nicely scented. "And they can immediately feel the effect of the moisturizer on their skin," she said.

The baby wash and lotion are both available in 250-ml bottles. The lotion costs P170; wash, P165. Until November, they are exclusively available at all Watson's outlets. After that, they will be available in major supermarkets.

Breastfeeding is good for mothers, too

BREASTFEEDING'S superior nutritional benefits have been scientifically proven.

Mother's milk helps promote the optimal brain, psychomotor and emotional development of a child.

But what most mothers do not know is that, aside from its unsurpassed nutritional advantage for the baby, breastfeeding offers remarkable "side benefits" for mothers, especially working women.

Suzi Entrata-Abrera, host of the television show "Unang Hirit," can personally attest to the amazing benefits of breastfeeding.

The proud mother of three girls, Leona (4), Jade (3) and 15-month-old Nella, Abrera says despite her busy schedule that also includes event hosting, guest appearances, and filming of commercials, she breastfed all three girls.

"It's a challenge to continue breastfeeding while you're working full-time, but it's manageable when you make time for it and pre-plan. That's how I successfully breastfed all my babies," she says.

Abrera says to make the most of the breastfeeding experience, a woman has to eat the right food. She says her diet helped her maintain a good nutritional status and shape.

"Imagine, every two years I was giving birth, so it was really important that I was healthy and had the nutrients I needed. When you're pregnant and when you breastfeed, you're nutritional requirement is higher, so you really have to practice proper nutrition," she says.

Abrera believes nursing mothers should keep themselves physically active to stay healthy. To make sure they get all the nutrition they need, they should have a well-balanced diet and take a milk supplement specially formulated for breastfeeding women so they get all the vitamins and minerals needed to produce nutrient-rich milk.

But Abrera found out that breastfeeding also meant personal gains for her.

She says breastfeeding helped her shed extra weight fast. After only three months of breastfeeding she was able to wear her usual clothes.

"When you're breastfeeding, you burn about 300-500 calories. That's like an hour on the treadmill. This may not work for everyone, but for a high percentage of women who breastfeed, it does," Abrera says.

She adds that she breastfed her youngest for a year and lost extra weight quickly. She is also lighter now than when she started having babies.

Abrera says breastfeeding mothers also get more sleep as they do not have to get up to prepare milk for their baby. "Breast milk is always ready for your baby," she points out.

Abrera says breastfeeding provides the best bonding experience. By breastfeeding, a mother has to focus on the child and temporarily forgets other distractions. This makes her more attuned to the baby's needs.

Many mothers like Abrera who have successfully breastfed have found the experience so positive that they have become advocates. She says, "I know that breastfeeding is 90-percent mental and only 10-percent physical that's why I really go out of my way to provide encouragement. Support is very important to breastfeeding moms."

She says her family's support was also a great help when she was breastfeeding. "Breastfeeding is not as easy as others think. I'm thankful my husband is very supportive, my mom, and even my in-laws are supportive. Add to that, it helps a lot to have very trustworthy and dependable yayas. These are people we can really count on when it comes to taking care of our kids."

For Abrera, the benefits of breastfeeding far outweigh the difficulties. "Breastfeeding is giving your child the best nourishment. It's also discovering a lot of great things about yourself as a woman, about your baby and the people who care about you. So just keep at it, and continue breastfeeding for as long as you can."

Get a grip

WHEN YOU ARE DOING NOTHING, feeling nothing, finding yourself at your wit's end, and snapping at anyone or anything that comes your way, it is time to get a grip on yourself.

Be aware

Stress can come from pressure (internal and external), fear, guilt, anxiety, etc. Most people believe they are operating normally, acting out their life as though stress is an ordinary part of it.

But living on stress regularly, if unmanaged, can sooner or later take its heavy toll on your health and eventually compromise your lifestyle. So, if you want to know where you are, take this simple test.

Your self-discovery must take into account the stress level under which you operate. Look inside yourself. Consider the following stress-inducing situations to assess your stress levels

1. Are you feeling inadequate at work?
2. Are you feeling inadequate in your love life?
3. Do you compare yourself unfavorably with your peers?
4. Are you dissatisfied with your marriage?

5. Are you having cash flow problems?
6. Are you in danger of losing your job?
7. Are you feeling bored?
8. Are you desperately afraid of something?
9. Have you made a promise you cannot fulfill?
10. Do you feel stuck in a stress cycle?

Dissect the causes of stress in your life and you will come to recognize your level of stress tolerance. Different people have different levels of tolerance.

The causes of all stress can be grouped into three:

1. People in your work, or none.
2. External life-changing events.
3. Lifestyle-related issues that cause you to be psychologically pressured.

Take charge

Coping with pressure may not be easy but it can be done.

Here are six sure ways:

1. Try to slow down. Whatever your pace, slow things down a notch or two, if you operate on fifth gear, then take it down to third gear. Thus you can do by promising yourself—not your doctor, husband/wife or children, but yourself.
2. Open your mouth wide. Then form an O. Say, "oh." Say "ah." Exhale.
3. Place your palms flat against the wall. As hard as you can, push. Release your inner pain/pressure. Then take your arms off the wall.

2. Try to calm your mind. Practice slow breathing.
3. List down all the positives in your life. Do not dwell on the negatives.

4. Stop telling yourself you are superman or superwoman. Everyone has a limit. In short, do not make yourself the dumping ground of everyone's problem. You cannot solve it for them. At least, not all the time.

5. Take a class in yoga.

6. Create powerful affirmations in your life.

Affirm

To affirm means to say "yes" to life. So grant yourself permission now. Do not hold yourself back. Instead, say to yourself the following:

"I am loved, respected, wealthy, successful, happy, joyful, fulfilled, centered, sexy, healthy..."

Relax now

1. Close your eyes. Squint them tightly. Release. Open your eyes. Inhale.

2. Open your mouth wide. Then form an O. Say, "oh." Say "ah." Exhale.

3. Place your palms flat against the wall. As hard as you can, push. Release your inner pain/pressure. Then take your arms off the wall.

ILLUSTRATION BY STEPH BRAUD

4. Lie on your back. Hug a pillow.
5. Form a fetal position. Visualize yourself in your mother's womb. Remember how loved you were then.
6. Stretch your arms as wide as you can as though hugging a giant tree. Then say: "I am ready to embrace life now."

Love and light!

Question:

News regarding raids of pharmacies with counterfeit medicines have been in the papers and television. What are counterfeit medicines and what are the possible dangers associated with these?

Doctor Says...

Counterfeit medicines, as defined by the World Health Organization are medicines, which are deliberately and fraudulently mislabeled with respect to identity and/or source. These are medicines that are primarily produced and sold to deceptively imitate or copy the authentic drugs. Counterfeit medicines may

- not contain the active drug ingredients
- contain insufficient quantity of the active ingredients
- have the wrong active ingredients or the wrong excipients/solvents
- be sold with inaccurate, incorrect or fake packaging
- contain harmful and toxic ingredients due to wrong manufacturing processes and/or due to sourcing contaminated chemicals

Counterfeiting is a worldwide problem, with approximately 5-10% of global medicines are counterfeit. There are countries where more than 50% of the drugs are counterfeits. Counterfeiting is more prevalent in developing countries like the Philippines. These are either manufactured locally or imported (smuggled) illegally into the country.

The progressively rising counterfeiting activities may be due to the increasing demand for cheaper drugs, the development of technologies that make it easier to counterfeit drugs, the ability to sell drugs directly to consumers due to illicit practices in some pharmacies or in unlicensed establishments, and the insufficient resources to implement local regulations and laws to counter these activities.

Counterfeited medicines may be cheaper than the authentic drug products but these are not equivalent in quality, safety and efficacy

Counterfeit drugs may put the person at risk of unexpected adverse or toxic effects, allergic reactions, or worsening of the existing medical condition. The risk for death is real.

It is important to remember that counterfeit drugs may not contain the stated active drug ingredients. Instead, these may contain inert or inactive substances that do not provide the intended therapeutic actions of the drug to make the patient better. Counterfeit medications can also contain incorrect ingredients, improper dosages of the correct ingredients or hazardous ingredients that can harm the patients and may even cause death.

Consumers can protect themselves from the risks associated with counterfeit drugs by purchasing prescription and over-the-counter medications from licensed pharmacies.

Everyone should vigilantly examine medications, paying attention to the presence of altered, tampered or unsealed containers and changes in the packaging of the product. Differences in the physical appearance of the product, taste or side effects experienced should alert patients to contact their physician, pharmacist or other healthcare professionals involved in giving them their medications. Counterfeiting is a serious crime and a public health emergency. Awareness and taking actions are the responsible options for any citizen. You may report suspected counterfeit medicines to the BFAD hotline numbers 807-0725, 807-0721.

What are the causes of liver cancer?

Primary liver cancer occurs when liver cells begin to grow out of control forming a tumor (mass of malignant/abnormally growing cells). It is believed that this is caused by exposure of these cells to certain insults that alters their growth pattern. Among these include, excessive alcohol intake (more than 10 ounces of wine, 24 ounces of beer or 3 ounces of 80-proof distilled spirits daily for men; and half of that for women); consuming food contaminated with fungi that produce aflatoxins (corn, soybeans and peanuts can be contaminated with such fungi); exposure to certain chemicals like vinyl chloride, thorium dioxide, arsenic and radium; and chronic hepatitis B and hepatitis C infection. Another form of liver cancer is metastatic liver cancer which actually started somewhere else in the body (e.g. colon, stomach, lung or breast) but later spread to the liver.

This week's answer to our feature question regarding the causes of liver cancer is courtesy of our accredited doctor in Paranaque, Dr. Joseph Arnes Clavio. Dr. Clavio obtained his medical degree at the University of Sto. Tomas where he also finished his residency training for Internal medicine and for Gastroenterology. Winners sign up to become 'losers'

NEW SENATOR FRANCIS "CHIZ" Escudero and Philippine Long Distance Telephone company senior vice president Butch Jimenez have enrolled in the Omnivital Lymphatics Program at Institut Santre.

The special treatment course helps the lymphatic flow and cleansing process by removing harmful substances from the body thus improving the metabolic rate to allow more effective burning of fat.

Escudero and Jimenez, both recipients of the Ten Outstanding Young Men awards, hope the process will help them lose a lot of weight, inches and toxins.

The senator signed up for the program to prepare for a grueling election campaign schedule. He wanted to strengthen his immune system, remove harmful toxins from his body, and improve internal circulation and his digestive condition.

Jimenez, on the other hand, joined Santre's patented Omnivital regular program to lose fat and inches. At the end of a four-month regimen, he lost 20 pounds and more than 42 cm or 16.5 inches all over his body.

He later moved into the same Omnivital Lymphatics program as Escudero. Jimenez needed the program to de-stress.

The Institut Santre is at 22 Jupiter cor Galaxy Streets, Bel-Air Village, Makati City (tel. 7595599, 0917-8195599, www.institutsentre.com)

Mother and daughter are out to Help

THE GRAND LAUNCH OF HEALTH, Education, Livelihood Program, as in Help, a joint project of that attractive mother-and-daughter team, Baby Arenas and Rachel, plus the birthday celebration of Baby A, the ever generous, golden-hearted philanthropist, founder and chair of the Father Pio Lend a Hand Foundation, at the Mandarin Hotel was definitely the high point of the week's social calendar, dahlings.

The grand ballroom was decorated with long-stemmed red roses (Baby's favorite), natch, and draped in white silk that matched the elegant white table cloth.

The presidential table had touches of red, its centerpiece of red roses arranged differently from the others.

President Macapagal-Arroyo, in an elegant gold beaded evening gown with matching bag and shoes, was swamped by the tres chic invitees, palanggas.

Speaker Jose de Venecia, who really enjoyed the music, even sang parts of the songs. We overhead him telling the President how nice the music was, palanggas, from the fabulous Jay Cayuca and the world-class Madrigal Singers.

Tres visible was the mix of newly-elected and veteran members of Congress, palanggas.

As usual, the Mandarin rolled out the red carpet. The fantastic cuisine was downed with excellent red and white wines and Dom Perignon champagne. Dessert was Baby's all-time favorite, "the special pudding with nuts and raisins with berries."

Naturellement, the talk of the evening was the mother-and-daughter team, how they tirelessly worked together for the good of the people, to make a difference in everyone's life whether rich or poor, both reaching out to others sincerely.

People were also whispering aloud if it was true that Andrea Bocelli was coming back. Well, only Baby can make another Bocelli magic come true in the Philippines, palanggas.

Rachel gave a short speech from the heart in flawless Tagalog and apres, looking pretty and slim in her Paul Cabral Japanese brocade gown, sung "Beautiful Girl" beautifully with the Madrigals.

Our Queen for the Day, Baby, was in a red and white pure silk long gown with a floral design on the skirt.

Power event

It was colorful in terms of the mix of invitees, the cocktails given by the exotic Fuego Hotels & Properties, the management group of the world-renowned Pearl Farm Beach Resort in Samal Island in Davao; the breathtaking world-class Taal Vista Hotel in Tagaytay City and the tres chic and exclusive Club Punta Fuego in Nasugbu Batangas.

The three resorts had the 2nd Corporation

OWNERS Sarah Castillo, Robert and Pia Sycip, with Tommy Ching and Fr. Meehan

Cocktail at l'Incontro, Ristorante Italiano, in Reposo, Makati, dahlings. With a power event like this there just had to be loads of VIPs and bigwigs from Makati, natch.

Hosted by Kathy Manuel, corporate director for sales, the happening got rolling with the welcome address of COO el muy simpatico Alfredo Roca. It was followed by the AVP-operations Juan Roca's introduction of the new GM for Club Punta Fuego, Alfonso Fernandez-Corralles; the new GM for Pearl Farm Beach Resort, Mikel Villaverde; and the new marketing communications manager for Fuego Hotels, Mitch Garcia, palanggas.

"This event was held to give property updates and to formally thank the top clients of the three properties some of which are from the country's leading companies and travel trade," explained Alfredo R.

Through the support of Rene Barbier, wines flowed and people had good food and fun at the 2nd Corporation Cocktail.

Hey, any of the three resorts will be a great way to escape our asphalt jungle, and chil. For info, do call 7501899, 7501895 or 7501897, or e-mail guests@fueghotels.com. Visit www.fueghotels.com.

Designing couple

They are young, vibrant and talented. Designer couple Paolo and Sarah Castillo opened their second super popular Isa Casa showroom in Serendra, palanggas.

Both of them come from families of furniture exporters and their eye-catching pieces have already graced the store windows of the renowned Bloomingdales and hotels like the prestigious Four Seasons, no less, dahlings.

Even world-renowned furniture designer Palecek has taken an interest in the designs of these two achievers.

Checking out the new store, moz noticed that this pair had come up with exciting ways to use our local material. Who would have imagined bamboo and stone could look this good?

Well, palanggas, they have come up with beautiful bedroom and dining set designs that will look gorgeous in both sprawling residences and cozy condo units.

But their talent does not end there, dahlings. They can custom-design pieces according to your needs. Just let the couple's artistic juices flow and they will come up with a personalized solution.

ACTRESS-host is glad for her ex-husband's awards.

ROMY HOMILLADA

Carmina's twin joys

By Bayani San Diego Jr.

HOST-ACTRESS CARMINA VILLARroel is in a daze.

She admits that her hectic work schedule—juggling the daily talk show "Sis" and nightly soap "Mga Mata ni Anghelita"—has left her spaced out.

"[Once] I got home from 'Anghelita' at 5 a.m. and woke up at 7 a.m. because my call time for 'Sis' was 8 a.m.," she relates. "Good thing, [co-hosts] Ate Janice and Gelli [de Belen] are there to cover for me when I feel like a zombie."

She's been so preoccupied that she didn't even know that ex-husband Rustom Padilla had tied for Best Actor with Mark Gil at the Gawad Urian last week.

"A guest on 'Sis' told me about it. I had been out of the loop," she explains. "I'd much rather tend to my kids than watch TV when I'm home kasi."

Lest it be misconstrued, she swiftly stresses that she's proud of Rustom's achievement.

"I'm glad for him. I've gotten over what happened [between us]. Since I'm happy with my life, I also want him to be happy with his. A Gawad Urian is such a big blessing."

Rustom, who has maintained cordial relations with his ex-wife, echoes the same sentiments: "It's clear that she's happy and that she wishes me happiness. Her children are so beautiful!"

Hands-on mom

Her 6-year-old twins by partner Zoren Legaspi are the main reasons that she's working so hard, Carmina points out.

No matter how busy, she's still a hands-on mom. "I bring Mavy and Cassy to school. Even if I lacked sleep the night before, I wake up early and have breakfast with them."

Constant communication is a must for her. "Even if I'm in a faraway location, I call them."

On the set of the series "Anghelita," which wraps up its run this week, she is often thinking of the kids.

"I see my daughter Cassy in [young co-star] Kristal [Reyes]," Carmina says. "They're both sweet and affectionate."

Since she herself joined the biz at the tender age of 12, she feels for child stars like Kristal. "I often ask about her studies. I advise her to never give up schooling. I can be inquisitive. It's the TV host in me," she admits.

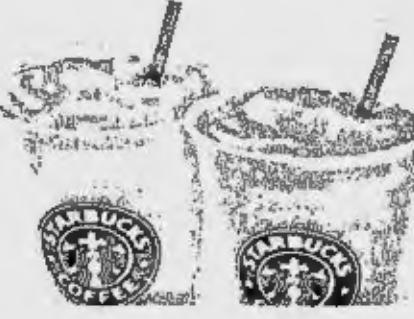

She's just as protective of her twins who've started doing TV ads, too. "Zoren and I are present on the set to make sure that the working conditions are okay. We don't want our kids to feel it's work. It's as if they're playing lang."

She affirms that she has a lot of things to be thankful for.

Last month, she received an unexpected birthday gift—a phone call from longtime crush Hollywood actor Josh Hartnett, who shot a movie in the South.

John and Shaina: Friends in love?

JOHN PRATS INSISTS THERE'S NOTHING more than friendship between him and Shaina Magdayao.

"Some people just put malice to our closeness. She's one of my best friends like Toni Gonzaga and Nikki Gil," he clarifies.

Are they friends in love or do they

John Lloyd happens to be one of her big crushes.

Although Lloydie is already taken, there's nothing wrong if he and Sarah grow fond of each other. They both could use some harmless admiration or innocent flirtation in their lives.

Too many girls

Polo Ravales was spotted at The Block of SM North with Carla Humphries. I cornered him about it but all I got was a standard show biz answer that they are just friends.

So I teased Polo some more. "So many girls, so little time huh?" He kept blushing.

Oh well, it's not surprising that a bachelor at large like Polo is seen with a lot of women.

Romance brewing?

Candy Pangilinan's co-stars in "Apat Depat" keep teasing her to Zanjoe Marudo. Does she have a harmless crush on him or is romance brewing between them?

Party time

After Fall Out Boy's sold out concert at the Big Dome, the band partied the night away at SideBar. I wonder if any of the boys fell for a pretty Pinay.

"I loved him in '40 Days and 40 Nights,' 'Hollywood Homicide' and 'Pearl Harbor,'" she says.

At the time of the call, she was preparing gifts for indigent kids, with whom she celebrated her birthday.

"A friend [who worked in the US production] called and passed the phone to Josh," she recounts. "I didn't want to sound like a fan, so I tried to keep cool. But he was so nice and sincere that I couldn't help myself. At the end of the call, I let out a shriek. I heard him laughing."

As bonus: "My friend told me that all throughout our conversation, Josh was smiling."
